Thomas Edward Sagoonick

Thomas Edward Sagoonick, "Little Tom," a respectful son, a special grandson, a loving and honorable brother and true friend to many of his relatives and close friends. We honor the life of Tom, born on January 19, 1974 in Anchorage to Lynn and Betty Jackson. He left us unexpectedly on July 16, 2010 while fishing, which he was so excited to finally start pursuing.

Tom was raised by his grandparents, Edward and Gertrude Sagoonick for the first three years of his life. Gertrude, who he called "mom", watched him closely. She would have to run after him when he ran away to the river.

Tom attended the Shaktoolik grade school until the eighth grade then went on to attend Mt. Edgecumbe High for a year. There he met three very special friends, Melinda and Miranda Lopez and Heather went to live in Palmer with his grandmother, Esther Otten and his uncle who was Tom's true and loyal friend, Wayne Otten. During recent months, he was hired and worked as the landfill operator for the IGAP program. He was also the city's heavy equipment operator for various city or community needs, and also helped a lot as a water plant operator. Whatever he was asked to do, he so willingly did without complaining.

Words cannot express our appreciation for Paul "Sicket" Bekoalok, for giving Tom a place he considered

Tom was always known to "borrow" things from friends and family, stuff that we never saw returned. When his mom Betty noticed something missing from her house, she would know exactly who took them, she'd say, "Tom must have taken it!"

Tom was fun, loving, charismatic, comical, and an out-going person who will be dearly missed but will never be forgotten. We all know that he had a special bond and a special place in the hearts of those who knew him. He had very few enemies and never held a grudge towards anyone. He could make you happy if you were sad and pick you up when you are down.

He had the utmost respect for his parents, his mother Betty especially who prayed for him and his safety every single day. She taught him to always pray and prepare his heart when it was time.

Harold R. Kimoktoak was born in Nome to Ronald Kimoktoak, Sr. and the late Loretta Muktoyuk on November 23, 1978. Harold married Linda Kimoktoak on April 18, 2003 in Nome. Together they adopted Martin David Edward Kimoktoak on August 4, 2003. Harold was a proud, loving father to Martin. They shared their love of Eskimo dancing with the King Island Dance Group. Harold and Martin enjoyed traveling, fishing, and going out into the country. He was looking forward to taking his son hunting. While on hunting trips Harold would often say, "My son should hurry up and grow up!" because he wanted to teach Martin how to hunt the way he was taught when he was growing up.

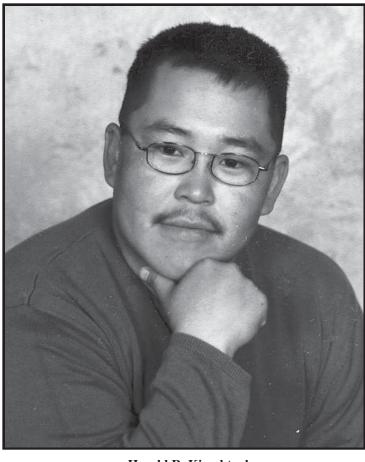

Harold was also a proud, loving uncle to Steven Harold, who was named for Harold. On December 29, 2000, Harold took the opportunity to introduce Steven to the whole family. After that, Steven was Harold's shadow. Harold, Martin, and Steven enjoyed basketball and the outdoors.

Harold had a passion for basketball. While attending Nome-Beltz High School, Harold was on the JV Nanook basketball team. Through his hard work and determination, Harold acquired many All-tourney trophies in City League basketball and many small village tournaments. For three years, Harold was an Alltourney in the Lonnie O'Connor Iditarod Basketball Classic.

Harold was a hard worker and excelled in many of the jobs he worked. Harold worked for Alaska Airlines, Hageland Aviation, A.T.S., and Hanson's. He last worked at the Norton Sound Seafood Plant as a crane operator and seafood processor. Harold was happy to go back to work and was hoping to work at the plant until October.

to Cussy Kauer. Words cannot explain the feeling of remorse we have towards her and her family. Anybody else in town would not have been so lenient on us. For this, we would also like to extend a huge thank you. By not pursuing a legal situation, her kindness and understanding has helped ensure that we will learn from on the right path. There's no way we can understand what you are going through, but we are willing to do anything to make amends. Once again, thank you.

There is nothing we are able to say or do that will make things right, but are deeply grateful to Cussy for being so kind-hearted after this whole ordeal. We know our choices have caused great pain and our words mean little, but hopefully our future actions will right our wrongs. Sincerely,

Dear Editor,

A local Nome woman was crowned Miss WEIO 2010 at the World Eskimo Indian Olympics last month. I was excited to hear about Marjorie Tahbone, a fellow Nomeite, not only being crowned Miss WEIO 2010, but nearly sweeping the pageant in all of the categories, as well as placing in a few of the Olympic games. Her accomplishment didn't get much coverage in the ADN or Fairbanks Miner, as the Miss WEIO pageant is generally overshadowed in the news by the WEIO games themselves. So, I was looking forward to hearing more about it in local news. I don't personally know Marjorie but, I am sure, in true Alaskan Native fashion, she is humbled by being chosen as Miss WEIO and is simply grateful to have her picture in the newspaper. It definitely was nice to see a photo of her dressed in her sash and regalia but, in my opinion, her achievement is big news, worthy of the front page and at the very least an article. She'll be attending the Gathering of Nations Powwow next year where she'll be representing all Alaskan Natives peoples. That's a big deal! What she's done is awesome and worthy of recognition. As a member of the Alaskan Native community I can safely say that as a whole, we love to hear about other Alaskan Native people who promote a positive and healthy lifestyle, uphold cultural values, encourage the importance of tradition and who are successful at it.

I hope this gets some more coverage in the Nome Nugget. I'd like to say congratulations and good luck to Marjorie in the future. I think she's a great role model for all of Nome, the surrounding communities and Indigenous youth everywhere! Moriah Sallaffie Nome, AK

Nome-Beltz makes the grade

By Tyler Rhodes

This year's measuring of Nome's schools against state and federal standards has produced mixed results.

For Nome-Beltz Junior/Senior High School the news from the April testing was good; the school for the first time in years has made the grade in the state's eyes, achieving what is referred to as adequate yearly progress, or AYP. Nome-Beltz only made AYP once before in 2006.

Locally, Nome-Beltz joins the Anvil City Science Academy charter school and the Extensions Correspondence school for homeschooled children in making AYP.

Nome Elementary School did not fare as well, again missing AYP. The elementary school joins the Nome Youth Facility in missing the mark for the 2009-2010 school year. The elementary school has made AYP once before in 2007.

The AYP yardstick measures how students in the state's schools score on math, reading and writing tests given over three days each April. The percentage of students in grades 3-10 deemed proficient in the categories largely determines if a school is said to make AYP. Other items such as graduation rates, attendance and improvement over a previous year's results also factor into AYP.

Nome-Beltz made the cut this year largely because of its improvement over last year's performance. While still not meeting the state's targets of 77.18 percent of students scoring proficient in reading and

NSEDC explores fish plant for Shaktoolik

Study will look into a shore-based or floating processor

By Laurie McNicholas

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. plans to study the feasibility of a shore-based fish processing plant in Shaktoolik or an at-sea processor to serve Shaktoolik and neighboring villages.

Results of the study are to be presented to the company's board of directors at budget meetings this fall. NSEDC currently operates a crab and halibut processing plant in Nome and a plant in Unalakleet to process salmon and herring.

Chum salmon returned to Norton Sound this year in numbers well above the average run anticipated. By the end of July the Norton Sound commercial chum catch topped 100,000 fish for the first time since 1988. More commercial fishers than usual participated in the chum harvest, and some complained that inadequate tender capacity restricted their efforts.

Harvey Sookiayak of Shaktoolik, a member of the executive committee of the NSEDC board of directors, asked the committee to support his processing facility proposal titled, "Critical Need for Fisheries Development in Shaktoolik" at an Aug. 3 meeting of the committee in Nome.

Sookiayak said this was the year for commercial salmon fishermen to make money, but tender operations were limited. Noting that numbers of salmon permit holders have increased in Shaktoolik, he said more villagers are looking for permits for next year.

Dean Peterson, Golovin's board member, said Unalakleet processing plant manager Middy Johnson has important ideas that should be explored. "I recognize the tender capacity problem," he added. "It's a real important factor."

Dan Harrelson of White Mountain, NSEDC president and board chairman, recited the following figures to illustrate a dramatic increase in commercial salmon fishing permits in recent years: "Unalakleet, 2003: 20 permits, 2009: 49 permits; Shaktoolik, 2003: 9 permits, 2009: 24 permits; Elim, 2003: 0 permits, 2009: 15 permits."

Tendering fish from Shaktoolik to Unalakleet is a long haul, Harrelson noted. He said better processing capability will result in a better quality product that is easier to sell, and he is 100 percent behind Sookiayak's proposal.

"I agree with all comments," said Nome's board member Don Stiles. He noted that the F/V Inaliq, the longest of NSEDC's four tenders, has been inoperable this year. Rich Ferry, manager of the Nome processing plant, told the committee that the Inaliq had filled with 30,000 gallons of water while docked at Seward last winter. He said the

Dear Editor,

The August 12 issue of the Nome Nugget incorrectly stated that Alaska Gold's dredge #6 has been sold for scrap metal. This is not true. Alaska Gold is in the process of reviewing various development options at its properties, which include the Rock Creek, Big Hurrah and Nome Gold projects, and other land parcels in the Nome area.

As part of the overall review of its projects, Alaska Gold has been cleaning up machinery, scrap metal and decades-old refuse from historical mining operations on the land surrounding Nome, and has donated some old mining equipment and other historic artifacts to the Nome Historical Committee.

Dark Ages Revisited

Way back in the Pleistocene when Nome's only satellite feed was dinner in the moonlight, we managed to live and conduct business in an orderly fashion. We ran credit cards by hand, watched cable TV with a two-week tape delay, our politics was straight-forward, our bananas were black, and we got our mail on time six days a week.

Now we have a lot of strange things to cope with. A rogue satellite has disrupted our banking, business and communications. Oh my gosh, our e-mail is down! Rogue is when something we trust has gone nuts and can't be trusted. It is not something to be proud of; although some politicians want to convince us that rogue is good. The campaign spin masters are at it again by telling us that big government is bad. These are the same politicians who want to be part of that "big" government. Go figure!

Some political ads border on the absurd—bears pooping in the woods, stalking their opponent, mud slinging, scaring old folks, telling what the other guy did or didn't do and trotting out the cute kids. The mud is flying and no one is focusing on the issues. Has any candidate laid out a plan for the future? Let's hope voters can see through the hype and roguery and make decisions for the good of the people. We need politicians who can restore America's credibility so we can invest in our future and not be thrown back into the dark ages.

Alaskans for Open Government slammed with fine

The Alaska Public Offices Commission assessed a $340,000 fine to the group called Alaskans for Open Government. The fines accumulated after the group didn't file APOC reporting requirements to disclose contributions and to register as a group in time. The group challenges the fines, saying that it wasn't formed to campaign for a specific ballot measure but supported the Clean Team Alaska entity. Clean Team Alaska withdrew from campaigning for ballot measure 1 after Lt. Governor Craig Campbell changed the ballot's language. Alaskans for Open Government plan to appeal the matter.

Alaskans mourn death of Ted Stevens

A week after the death of former Senator Ted Stevens in a plane crash near Dillingham, three-day long memorial services were held in Anchorage this week. The U.S. Senate last week convened for a short memorial and passed a resolution that recognized Stevens's "significant role" in the transformation of Alaska from an impoverished territory to a fullfledged state. The resolution cites Stevens's assistance in providing Alaska with energy facilities, hospitals and clinics, roads, docks, airports, water and sewer facilities and schools. These accomplishments had earned him recognition as 'Alaskan of the Century' from the state legislature in 2000. The resolution also highlights Stevens's military record as a World War II pilot, his lead role in securing the legislation that led to Alaska statehood and his numerous Senate leadership positions, including President pro tempore and assistant Republican leader, and chairman of the Appropriations, Commerce, Governmental Affairs, Rules and Ethics committees during his 40-year Senate tenure. The resolution singles out Stevens's leadership role in passage of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act, the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act, the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act and the Telecommunications Act of 1996. Governor Sean Parnell has ordered state and U.S. flags to be lowered to half-staff last Wednesday in honor and memory of Senator Stevens. The state flags remained lowered until sunrise the day following the senator's memorial service.

Plane crash near McGrath kills two

Three separate plane crashes required the response of rescue squandrons in Dillingham, McGrath and Knik Glacier last week. The crash that killed Ted Stevens and four other people received the most attention, but a Friday crash 37 miles northeast of Mc-Grath killed two people. The crash site was at an elevation of 2,000-foot in the Sunshine Mountains. Alaska State Troopers identified the two people from Chugiak as 79-year-old John Graybill and 78-year-old Dolores Mae Graybill. Authorities say a dog was found alive. Troopers say the cause of the crash has not been determined, but weather appears to be a factor.

Rescue mission requires rescue on Knik Glacier

After a small plane with sightseeing tourists crashed on Knik glacier last week, a responding Alaska Army National Guard Black Hawk also became involved in an accident as it slid and rolled over on the glacier. The helicopter had three crewmen on board, who were not injured but ended up joining the stranded party of five on the glacier. The sightseeing plane owned by a Palmer resident with four visiting friends from Galveston, Texas on board, went down on Sunday. Nobody was injured, but the passengers had no survival gear and were wearing only light clothing when inclement weather closed in at the 8,500 foot high crash site on the glacier. The rescue coordination center dispatched three pararescuemen to hike to the crash site to deliver shelter, food and gear. Blizzard-like condition, a thick cloud cover and 70mile-per-hour winds delayed the ground crew from reaching the crash victims and attempts from the air to get to the distressed crew also became impossible. By Monday night the pararescuers reached the people. Additional aircraft was busy in Dillingham to tend to the plane crash that killed Ted Stevens and four others. Alaska State Troopers were called to the rescue, but couldn't make it to the crash site due to weather. On Tuesday, two Black Hawks were dispatched to the site, one landed but became heavily damaged when it slid and rolled over. By Tuesday night, the RCC sent a Pave Hawk helicopter and HC-130 to the scene with additional supplies and hopes of rescuing the 12 people stranded on the glacier. With a break in the weather, the Guard was able to rescue three of the Texans, Mary Jan, Patrick and David Lantz from Galveston. Weather turned bad again, and two of the original plane crash victims plus seven Alaska National guardsmen were waiting to be rescued off the glacier. On Wednesday, weather turned for the better and by the afternoon, a National Guard helicopter landed and ferried all nine people to the Knik Valley. No injuries were reported.

Fairbanksan appointed to chair Arctic Research Commission

President Barack Obama appointed Dr. Virgil "Buck" Sharpton of Fairbanks as acting chairman of the U.S. Arctic Research Commission. The commission is a federal entity charged with coordinating and advocating national Arctic policy. Since 2006, Sharpton has been vice chancellor for research at the University of Alaska Fairbanks. He also is founder and director of the Geographic Information Network of Alaska. Prior to joining UAF in 1998, Sharpton was a senior staff scientist at the Lunar Planetary Institute affiliated with the NASA Johnson Space Center. He holds doctorate and master's degrees in geological sciences from Brown University. Sharpton was appointed to the Arctic Research Commission by President Bush in 2008. As acting chair, he replaces Mead Treadwell. Treadwell resigned to run a campaign for lieutenant governor. Replacing Nome's Vera Metcalf, Obama appointed Mary Pete of Bethel, director of the Kuskokwim campus of the University of Alaska, to the commission.

Wind, waves and a dredge turn out Nome's lights

Photos By Nadja Roessek

Strong winds and a slipped anchor caused Nome residents to be in the dark for a couple of hours Sunday evening as Nome Joint Utility crews worked to repair a power line that had snapped and fallen into the Snake River.

According to NJUS manager John Handeland, the anchor of a moored ocean-going dredge failed to hold in the wind and waves, allowing the boat to float up the Snake River from the mouth. At approximately 8 p.m., the dredge's antenna mast snagged a high-voltage line, snapping it and sending it into the river.

The broken line supplies power to the hospital, Icy View, the high school and the jail. Handeland said power was initially restored to those areas by looping it into the line which feeds the Federal Aviation Administration facilities. With the assistance of the Nome Volunteer Fire and Ambulance departments and the city's new safety/port boat, The Guardian, NJUS crews were able to recover the line from the river, splice and hang it again over the river.

Handeland said repairs were complete and all areas of town were back online by 10:30 p.m. "NJUS appreciates the volunteer forces that responded so quickly in the inclement weather to assist our crews, which greatly aided in the process and helped shorten the duration of the outage," Handeland wrote in an email to the Nugget.

Handeland said small outages in various parts of town were encountered throughout the day Sunday as high winds whipped power lines together. Sunday was the third windiest day of 2010, with a peak wind of 43 knots. It was the windiest Aug. 15 on record, according to the National Weather Service's online database.

oil-drilling projects from environmental review. However, non-deepwater drilling operations may continue to be approved without environmental review. Also, deepwater wells and rigs already approved under the environmental review process will not have to seek full National Environmental Policy Act or Endangered Species Act compliance. The House of Representatives recently passed an oil-response bill which prohibits the use of categorical exclusions for offshore drilling plans at all depths.

16 mushers sign up for Yukon Quest

The opening day of signups for the 2011 Yukon Quest ended with 16 mushers registering their names to run the 1,100-mile race from Whitehorse to Fairbanks. Quest and Iditarod musher Hugh Neff, this year's third place finisher and Ken Anderson of Fairbanks are the two most recognizable names on the sign-up sheet yet. Notably absent are this year's winner Hans Gatt, former champion Lance Mackey, and the Whitehorse contingent Sebastian Schnuelle and Gerry Willomitzer. The 2011 Yukon Quest starts February 5th in Whitehorse, Yukon.

Vets sound off on health care delivery

By Sandra L. Medearis

U.S. Sen. Mark Begich visited Nome last week, one stop in a string of visits to rural Alaska to gather input on his attempt to improve health care, especially health care for Alaska's Armed Services veterans in rural areas.

Two groups organized by Begich have traveled throughout Alaska to hold meetings also in Anchorage, Fairbanks, Kotzebue, Galena, Golovin, Bethel, Saint Mary's, Hooper Bay and the Kenai Peninsula.

At the meeting at Alaska Army National Guard Armory, representatives from the committees conceded with agreement from local veterans that the healthcare delivery needs to be streamlined and information more freely flowing on what is available and how to connect.

Veteran Ron Huffman commented that many are not able, especially in villages, to find information on computers. They need the benefit of local get-togethers with VA service representatives.

The idea is to streamline the process so that veterans seeking care can understand what they are entitled to and what the process is.

The VA needs to make it easier for Alaskans to get health care contact, to go from adversary to advocate, starting with delivery. Delivery of knowledge about the VA medical system has not been very good, with a lot of vets in villages not getting benefits, committee members said.

Vets said they had experienced a failure or a delay in getting callbacks from the VA. Charles Trainor, having faced the possibility of having essential treatment delayed and failure to get calls returned, laid it on the line.

He contacted Sen. Stevens' office and had his needs met in a month, he said.

"If I've done my time, I want my coverage," Trainor said. I don't want to fight every nickel and dime. . . I don't want to be part of a political football." Trainor issued a challenge

"When I look at someone coming into office, I say, 'Is this person a cocker spaniel or a pitbull. Sen. Stevens was a pit bull. He had a mean look. He wasn't going to be pushed around," Trainor said.

"Re veterans in the Bush, why couldn't it be handled by Norton Sound [Regional Hospital]?" Huffman asked.

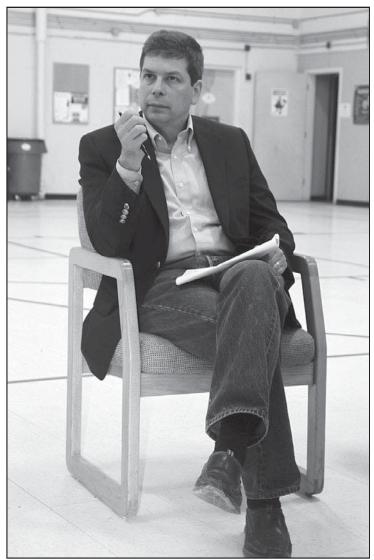

"You are singing my tune," Begich declared. With IHS running some health care instead of having people fly to Anchorage, the patient would be near family and friends for less costly service.

Another thought came forward that rather than go to the local hospital for many short appointments at long intervals, a vet might want to go to Anchorage to accomplish treatment in a tightly scheduled two days.

The Alaska Health Care Working Group is made up of health care leaders from the military, Indian Health Service VA, TRICARE, and the Center for Medicare & Medicaid Services (CMS). The group, created by an amendment from Sen. Begich in the federal health care bill, is tasked with addressing a broad range of issues facing Alaskans who receive federal health care services. Half of all Alaskans get health care from an entity of the federal government. The amendment specifically establishes an "Interagency Task Force to Assess and Improve Health Care in Alaska.' The task force will present a report to Congress by September 23.

A second working group was formed after a June hearing of the Senate Veterans' Affairs Committee where Sen. Begich secured a commitment from the VA to meet over the summer with officials from tribal health organizations to focus on ways to improve care for rural veterans in Alaska. In Alaska, the tribal health organizations negotiate with IHS to offer health services in regions around the state.

Begich looks to the time when the whole state is connected by broadband. "The goal is telemedicine, an incredible system," he said.

Huffman said a way to distribute info, would be a large reference book and a veterans service officer to get out to sites. Begich agreed that community meetings and walk-throughs with small groups of vets could be the way to go.

"An increasing number of veterans have serious service-connected injuries. They should be able to go to any nearby health provider and have their care covered by the Veterans Administration. This is particularly important to veterans who live in rural areas and are often quite far from VA hospitals or clinics. The new health reform protects current soldiers, veterans and their families – and I am working to extend coverage under TRICARE to dependent children until they turn 26 years old," Begich said.

"There's no doubt this has been an eye-opening experience for a number of these folks visiting Alaska, hearing firsthand the difficulties Alaskans face getting timely health care from various sources and also just knowing what is available to veterans in terms of benefits from the VA," Begich said in a followup statement. "More than one of our group members has remarked about what they've learned and how they can go back and make improvements or better coordinate information and service delivery."

Begich's schedule Aug. 11 also included meetings with Kawerak, Inc, the local Veterans of Foreign Wars, and Norton Sound Regional Hospital.

Muskoxen make themselves at home in Nome

By Sandra L. Medearis

There is a land-use conflict brewing around the outer city limits of Nome that may move closer to down-

Muskoxen are coming closer and closer as they graze willows and browse on grasses, sedges and woody plants. This relocation poses little threat to people who use common sense and give the animals a wide berth, biologists say, but is not good news for dogs.

Sunday morning a group of muskoxen feasted on greens around East End Park where Bypass Road meets East Front Street, enjoying the roof over the picnic tables, breaking in the park after Nome Rotary Club volunteers cleaned it up Saturday.

Hosts not long ago had to take visiting relatives on drives in the country hoping for good fortune to reveal muskoxen to scrambling shutterbugs whispering "Quick, quick! Get the camera!" Sometimes visitors went home without seeing any of the short stocky animals. But lately, in-town grassy areas have been littered with muskoxen wandering closer and closer to residents.

"There is nowhere in the world where people can so easily see them, said Tim Smith, friend and observer of muskoxen.

Muskoxen probably don't see a land-use conflict. Muskoxen see no reason not to share space with humans, according to Smith, who has studied muskoxen on Nunivak Island, the source of Seward Peninsula muskoxen.

"Muskox are social animals," Smith said. "They are not afraid of people unless they are being hunted. They are not very smart, but sooner or later they can figure out they are being hunted."

Muskoxen generally allow themselves to be observed comfortably from the road system or trails, according to state Dept. of Fish and Game staff. Physical encounters between people and muskoxen are rare.

But muskoxen draw the line at dogs. They hate dogs, as they hate and fear wolves, their prime predators. Muskoxen have seriously injured several dogs recently. More about dogs in a minute.

Getting back to muskoxen and people, the season-mating season-is here, starting about now, mid-to late August through October when extra care needs be taken when muskoxen can be stubborn, defensive or protective when approached. Bulls are in competition; both winners and losers are cranky.

The shaggy pre-historic animals need space to conduct their normal lifestyle without interference. When they get aggressive, that means they want intruders out of their space.

Leave, Smith advises. Muskoxen, unlike bears, do not have a chase instinct excited by running prey. People aren't prey to muskoxen, but intruders or threats to the herd or young.

"Just use a little sensitivity. All they want you to do is back off," Smith said. "All you have to do is run."

Muskoxen give warning when people are too close, Smith said. If they horn the ground, leave. If they rub their foreheads on their front legs, scram. If they look directly at a person, time to go. A loud snort is a sure sign an observer is too close.

Dogs, that's a different story. Restrain dogs when near muskox groups, ADF&G warns. Dogs can be perceived as predators. Muskoxen will respond aggressively to protect the herd. A problem arises when muskox territory overlaps residential yards, paths or dog team stake out yards.

"Dogs are a big problem," Smith said. "You have to keep dogs away. If you have a dog, you don't want the muskox to see it, hear it or smell it. Give the animals good berth and they won't come after you.

"Dogs will chase the muskox. Then the muskox will chase the dogs. Then they will chase you.'

Muskoxen use a wide variety of habitats when there is no snow on the ground. They can move long distances in a short period of time, and pop up in previously unoccupied places. Keeping an eye out and staying alert is a good idea.

Mature bulls stand about five feet high and weigh 600 to 800 pounds. Cows are smaller, standing about a foot shorter and weigh 400 to 500 pounds.

New commandant gets quick tour of Nome

Sen. Lisa Murkowski and Admiral Robert Papp, the new Commandant of the U.S. Coast Guard, made a quick stop in Nome Aug. 12 after a longer visit in Barrow earlier in the day.

The stops were part of a larger tour of the state. Greeted by Nome Mayor Denise Michels and City Manager Josie Bahnke, Admiral Papp, Murkowski and several other Coast Guard officials made a quick stop at Nome's port to speak with media before a brief sit-down meeting. Papp, who took the helm as the Coast Guard's chief officer on May 25, said he previously visited Nome while working on a buoy-tender that was based out of Adak. The ship stopped in Nome to resupply in 1976, allowing the crew to march in the 1976 bicentennial parade.

Papp noted the changes along the port, saying that navigating into Nome at the time was a treacherous operation with no pier and only a small spit for protection. He said part of the reason he was in town was to see the improvements that have been made.

Mayor Michels was eager to note that more improvement is still needed. She noted the increase in vessel traffic by everything from fishing tenders to cruise ships and the limitations at the current port. "We ain't going to be able to do it ourselves," she said. "We need partners."

Murkowski spoke to the same need, albeit with a more statewide focus. "We are lacking in infrastructure in so many ways," she said, explaining part of her motivation in bringing the commandant to Alaska.

With Arctic waters opening to allow new shipping routes and exploration—both for oil and adventure—a Coast Guard presence is becoming more and more important in the northern stretches of the state. Michels has been working hard to make sure Nome is on the Coast Guard's radar as they consider expanding their operations.

Papp acknowledged the limited resources in Alaska and noted that improving the Coast Guard's icebreaking capabilities is his highest priority. Only one of the Coast Guard's three icebreakers is currently working, and that vessel is not capable of operating in heavy ice. "As we speak here, there are no heavy icebreakers for use up here," Papp said.

Papp said his second priority in addressing the needs in Alaska was aviation. "I would like to have more helicopters," he said. "We need to investigate where to stick them."

A three-year term will be voted on for the seat currently held by Kirsten Timbers. A one-year seat will be voted on for the seat currently held by Barb Amarok. A third seat, for a two-year term, will also be up for grabs. That seat is currently held by Wilma Osborne.

Investigation concludes Trooper was justified in Golovin shooting

The Alaska Bureau of Investigation has concluded that Nome-based Alaska State Trooper Jonnathon Stroebele's shooting of a Golovin man in March was justified according to state law and the department's policy.

Stroebele shot and killed 38-yearold Joseph Amaktoolik in March as he attempted to transport Amaktoolik from Golovin to Nome and on to Anchorage for treatment on mental health issues. According to Troopers, Amaktoolik emerged from his house with a rifle when Stroebele and a health aide approached.

According to the Troopers, the Office of Special Prosecutions and Appeals within the Department of Law and the Alaska State Trooper Director's office both determined that Stroebele took appropriate action. The Troopers said criminal and internal investigations occur following all Trooper-involved shootings as standard procedure.

writing, and 66.09 percent scoring proficient in math, the school saw a significant jump in its scores. Those jumps allowed the school to meet AYP, despite scoring 67 percent proficient in the reading and language category and 62 percent proficient in math. Those numbers compare to 58 percent proficient in the language arts category the previous year and 51 percent proficient in math.

The Anvil City Science Academy, serving fifth through eighth graders, again easily eclipsed the state's standards, with 91 percent of its students testing proficient in both the math and the language arts categories. With only eight students, the state's report on the correspondence school for homeschool students only gives vague numbers on their performance out of privacy concerns. The report said at least 75 percent of the correspondence students scored proficient in both areas.

Nome-Beltz, the charter school and the correspondence school were three of the 302 schools statewide that made the cut for AYP this year. Overall, 59.8 percent of the state's 505 schools made AYP, a 3.6 percent improvement over 2008-2009.

It was language scores that kept Nome Elementary School from making AYP for the 2009-2010 school year. To make AYP overall, a school needs to meet standards in a number of categories. The elementary school essentially pulled a flipflop when comparing this year's testing to the previous year when it was deemed proficient in language but not so in math.

The school saw its score in the reading, writing and language sections drop from 61 percent in 2009 to 60 percent in 2010. In 2009, the elementary school made AYP in language by showing an improvement over the previous year. Through that improvement provision, dubbed safe harbor by the state, Nome Elementary was able to make AYP in math this year by having 58 percent of its students score proficient. The school did not make AYP in math last year when only 54 percent scored proficient.

The language and math tests are not the only factors by which schools are judged. Nome Elementary School was also evaluated on its attendance records while Nome-

Beltz's graduation rate is examined. Both schools saw improvements in these categories with Nome Elementary recording an attendance rate of 91.44 percent compared to 88.8 percent a year earlier. Nome-Beltz posted a 73.2 percent graduation rate in 2010 compared to 71.4 percent the year before.

By not meeting AYP overall, Nome Elementary remains at what is referred to as level five, the bottom rank given to schools not able to achieve AYP. This is Nome Elementary School's third year at level five. Despite making AYP in this most recent round of testing, Nome-Beltz remains at level five. If a school has not made AYP for two consecutive years or more, it needs to make AYP at least two years in a row to get back to a clean slate. As a school descends through the various levels, it faces mounting consequences and requirements that aim to bring it up to par with the state's standards. In the most extreme cases, the state could opt to replace the administration or teaching staff in a school. While such an outcome appears remote for Alaska's school districts, the state has sent an administrator to Southwest Alaska's Yupiit School District to help oversee the district with the power to implement changes where necessary

The Nome Youth Facility, which houses students referred by the court system or authorities, failed to make AYP due to the number of students who took the test. While enough of the students who took the tests scored proficient in both the language and math, only three of the six students enrolled during the testing period took the test. The state rules call for all but two of the students to take the tests if the enrollment number is fewer than 40.

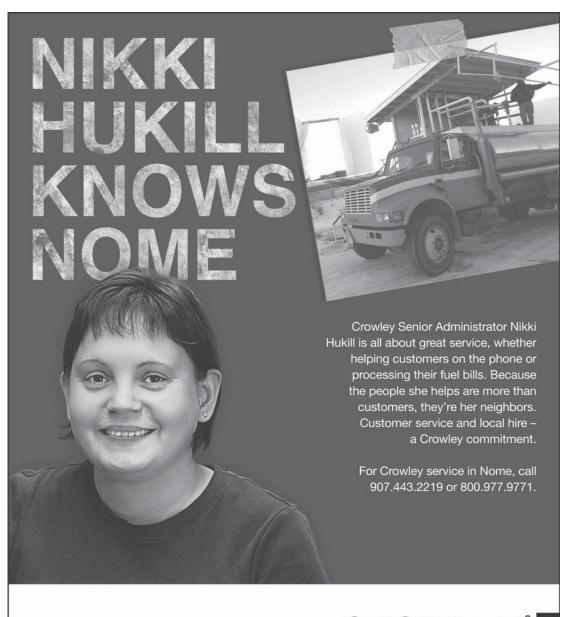

More than half of BSSD schools make AYP

Eight of the 15 schools that comprise the Bering Strait School District made AYP this year. Clearing the hurdle were the Aniguiin School in Elim, Martin L. Olson School in Golovin, Koyuk Malemute School, Shaktoolik School, Anthony A. Andrews School in St. Michael, James C. Isabell School in Teller, the Unalakleet Schools and the White Mountain School.

The schools in St. Michael and Koyuk both achieved their second year of AYP, removing them from the improvement list after being at level five. Elim's school is still at level five, needing one more year of AYP to be removed.

While failing to make overall AYP, a few BSSD schools met some of the academic requirements. Shish-maref School was deemed proficient in both language arts and math, but failed to meet the graduation requirement with its rate of only 22.5 percent. The schools in Brevig Mission and Diomede both met the proficiency requirement in math. The schools in Gambell, Stebbins and Wales missed the mark on the academic requirements but had an acceptable graduation rate. Savoonga's school, in its seventh year of level five, fell short in all categories.

Commercial red king crab harvest nears completion

By Jim Menard, Alaska Department of Fish and Game

The Norton Sound red king crab catch in the open access fishery totaled 293,000 pounds Aug. 14, with 77,000 pounds of quota remaining.

After the storm blows through this week and the crab fleet makes its next delivery, the harvest will near completion and the Alaska Department of Fish and Game is likely to announce a closure date for the fishery.

The Norton Sound commercial salmon harvest through Aug. 14 totaled 104 kings, 80 sockeyes, 31,826 pinks, 113,264 chums and 35,058 silvers. This year's chum harvest is the best since 1986. The percentage of four-year-old chums counted at Norton Sound escapement projects set a record this year.

The department delayed a commercial fishing period in subdistricts 5-6 due to stormy weather and will schedule the next fishing period in coordination with the buyer.

The subsistence set gillnet fishing schedule in marine waters of the Nome subdistrict is 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Saturday by regulation. The subsistence area set gillnet schedule in fresh waters of the subdistrict is 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Wednesday, and 6 p.m. Thursday until 6 p.m. Saturday. Beach seining is not allowed.

In the Port Clarence district, all gillnet fishing is closed in the Kuzitrin and Pilgrim rivers until further notice. Beach seining is open, but all kings, sockeyes and silvers must be returned immediately to the water. Salmon Lake remains closed to salmon fishing.

The commercial chum salmon catch in the Kotzebue district totaled 184,171 fish for 58 fishermen through Aug. 14. It is on track to be the best harvest since 1995.

Stock market losses slow NSEDC's growth

NSEDC subsidiary Siu Alaska Corp. buys partner's fishing rights for Pacific cod

By Laurie McNicholas

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. began 2010 with a first quarter growth spurt fueled in part by stock market profits of $1.9 million, but market losses in the second quarter resulted in a net loss of $1.5 million through June 30, according to the firm's Controller Rick Walicki. "July is a good month and we are almost up to break-even through July," he told NSEDC board members during their second quarter meeting Aug. 2-5 in Nome.

NSEDC's net worth increased by $1 million in the first half of this year despite a volatile stock market, but growth is lagging well behind 2009 when the company ended the year with a gain of $11.7 million in net assets.

Walicki said the company's net assets, including non-controlling interests, totaled $136.3 million on June 30, down $4 million from the $140.3 million he reported for March 31 at the board's April meeting in Unalakleet. (The non-controlling interests are two entities that each own 25 percent of the crabber F/V Aleutian No. 1. They are the Bering Sea Women's Group and a company owned by two captains of the vessel.)

owned by two captains of the vessel.)
Walicki explained several other significant variances in figures at mid-year 2010 compared to mid-year 2009 in his second quarter financial report to the board. NSEDC receives profit distributions from Glacier Fish Co. based on the company's 37.5 percent ownership interest in GFC. GFC's holdings include about 6.2 percent of the annual total allowable catch in the Bering Sea pollock fishery.

In July 2009 Walicki reported a profit distribution of $6.5 million from GFC through June 30. Two weeks ago he reported a distribution of $2.5 million from GFC through June 30, 2010. Walicki said the $6.5 million figure for 2009 was incorrect, and the amount actually received from GFC was about the same as the $2.5 million figure for June 30, 2010. He said he had overestimated the amount due from GFC but not yet received on June 30, 2009. "We estimated for the entire year, but GFC ended the year lower," he added.

GFC also pays royalties to NSEDC for harvesting allocations of Bering Sea pollock the company receives as one of six entities in the Western Alaska Community Development Program. NSEDC receives 2.2 percent of the annual total allowable catch of Bering Sea pollock, along with allocations of other groundfish species and crab through the CDQ program. NSEDC also owns individual fishing quota (IFQ) for sablefish, halibut and other species.

CDQ and IFQ revenues totaled

$5.8 million as of June 30 this year, compared to $5.3 million through June 30, 2009, Walicki reported. Dan Harrelson, NSEDC's board chairman and president, asked Walicki if CDQ royalties from GFC are included in the total. "Yes, it's on the balance sheet as accounts receivable," he replied.

Walicki told the board the key thing to take away is that operations yielded $11 million in cash through June 30, about $9 million of which was invested back into the company. He said cash assets have increased by $1.9 million since the first of the year to a total of $10.2 million on June 30.

Walicki pointed out a decrease of $1 million in administrative expenses for June 30, 2010 compared to June 30 of last year. He said $1 million for estimated tax payments remained in the 2009 budget after he made tax deposits totaling about $800,000 for the first and second quarters. Walicki explained that he made no more tax deposits in 2009 because John Eckels, president of Siu Alaska Corp., NSEDC's wholly owned for-profit subsidiary, determined that no additional taxes would be due. NSEDC has endowed Siu with vessels and profitmaking businesses, including the parent company's ownership interest in GFC. "Estimated taxes for 2010 are zero," Walicki added.

"The Precious Metals People"

Siu Alaska Corp.

Walicki noted that NSEDC's liabilities totaled $12.1 million on June 30, compared to $3.7 million on the same date last year. He said Siu Alaska recently drew on its line of credit with Wells Fargo Bank for about $8 million, invested more than $2 million in the C/P Glacier Bay for debt payment, and at the same time purchased $6.1 million worth of quota shares. NSEDC's investment in quota share units now totals $17.3 million, he added.

Eckels said Siu Alaska has purchased GFC's 50 percent of the Glacier Bay's fishing rights in the Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands Pacific cod fishery under the federal License Limitation Program, adding it to 50 percent of the vessel's LLP that Siu already owned. He said Clipper Seafoods will harvest B season cod for Siu and has guaranteed a 100 percent harvest of the quota. The Glacier Bay is up for sale and has attracted interest but no firm offers, he added.

Eckels told the NSEDC board at its April meeting that GFC had been fishing cod with the longliners Glacier Bay and C/P Norton Sound without much success, so the company had decided to get out of cod fishing.

In e-mail replies to questions from The Nome Nugget following the April board meeting, Eckels said GFC planned to sell the Norton Sound's LLP under a federal buyback program. "Assuming the buyback is completed, vessel ownership is retained, the LLP is retired," Eckels explained. "No existing cod allocations will be affected by the program." He estimated that Siu may net about $3 million as its share of proceeds from the sale.

On July 22, GFC sold 100 percent of its remaining cod fishing rights to a competitor, GFC's representative Rob Wood told the NSEDC board two weeks ago in Nome. "GFC used getting out of cod to strengthen its investment picture," he added.

Wood reports that a private cod cooperative has been formed and all in the industry have signed on. He said a bill pending in Congress would formalize rationalization of the industry. H.R. 3910, a bill to approve and implement a single fishery cooperative for the longline catcher processor subsector in the Bering Sea and Aleutian Islands was introduced in the House of Representatives Oct. 22, 2009. Rep. Don Young is among its cosponsors.

Wood said GFC's catch rates of B season pollock are steady, and the average size of the harvested fish is good for recovery of products. The F/V Pacific Glacier, one of three pollock catcher-processors owned by GFC, has engine issues and probably will be in Seattle until Sept. 1 and then will fish hake, Wood reported. He said the vessel's problem will have little impact on GFC because it is insured. The Alaska Ocean will harvest the Pacific Glacier's pollock in the Bering Sea, he added.

Eckels said the F/V Aleutian No. 1 will begin fishing golden king crab this month in the eastern Aleutians Islands, and crab prices continue to strengthen. "The A-1 is profitable so far this year, unlike last year due to work on the vessel and the price of crab," he added.

The F/V Pacific Star is back in Seattle following survey work in Alaska under contract to the National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration, Eckels reported. "The weather was so good, the work was done in 60 days instead of the 100 we hoped for," he noted. He said Siu needs clients to charter the vessel from 100 to 150 days a year to make a profit, and Ocean Services is looking for them.

NSEDC board member Don Stiles of Nome moved to approve refreshing a line of credit guarantee with Wells Fargo Bank on behalf of Siu Alaska Corp. The topic was discussed in executive session prior to the motion. Stiles is chairman of the Siu Alaska board.

"The amount?" asked Joe Garnie, who represents Teller on the NSEDC board.

"$6.7 million was discussed," replied Stiles. The board approved Stiles' motion by a 14-1 vote. Garnie voted no.

damaged vessel had been repaired and was on its way to Norton Sound.

Janis Ivanoff, NSEDC's chief executive officer, said nine Golovin permit holders are fishing salmon this year, compared to two in 2009 and one in 2008. There were no salmon permits in the village from 2003 through 2007, she noted.

"Middy is to be applauded for his efforts to facilitate permits," Ivanoff said. She credited Johnson with bringing salmon permits back to Norton Sound and identifying residents who want them. "It was a lot of coordinating work on his part," she added.

"Is there a recommendation for staff to conduct a feasibility study of a shore-based or at-sea based eastern Norton Sound processing [facility] to allow for increased processing there?" Harrelson asked.

"I make a motion for a feasibility study," Stiles replied.

"I want Middy to be involved," Peterson said.

Harrelson said Johnson, Ferry and other appropriate staff will be involved in the study. The executive committee unanimously approved Stiles' motion, and on Aug. 6 the full NSEDC board adopted Stiles' motion to approve the committee's recommendation.

The Shaktoolik seat on the NSEDC board will be up for election in October, as will board seats for Brevig Mission, Little Diomede, Unalakleet and White Mountain.

Village fish plant manual

"A Village Fish Processing Plant: Yes or No" is an easy-to-read handbook with advice about planning a fish processing plant in an Alaskan village. Its authors are economics professor Gunnar Knapp of the Institute of Social and Economic Research, University of Alaska Anchorage, and Terry Reeve, an Alaska Sea Grant Marine Advisory Program agent in Bethel. Reeve is a professor with the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

The 125-page manual was published by ISER in 2008 and may be downloaded free of charge at the following website: http://seagrant.uaf.edu/bookstore/pubs/M-89.html.

Nome MAP agent

MAP Director Paula Cullenberg thanked the NSEDC board on behalf of University of Alaska Fairbanks for fully funding Heidi Herter as Nome's first MAP agent for three years and providing her with a travel budget to conduct classes in the region's villages. She credited NSEDC's commitment and Herter's success with convincing the Legislature and UAF officials that the position is a good investment.

Cullenberg said the university asked the Legislature for $600,000. The Legislature agreed to $300,000, and UAF agreed to match it, providing funding for permanent faculty positions in Cordova, Dillingham, Kodiak, Nome, Petersburg and Unalaska.

LOCAL

Cullenberg gave board members printouts of a slide presentation Herter prepared last February to review impacts of MAP's first three years in the Bering Strait region. She said Herter partnered with other entities to conduct projects in coastal stewardship, water quality monitoring, commercial fisheries development and marine safety, and worked with youth to help them understand resource management.

Cullenberg also presented the board with a photo of Herter assisting with NSEDC's blue king crab research project on Little Diomede and a letter of appreciation from UAF Chancellor Brian Rodgers. Herter is in Glacier Bay doing scientific work this summer and plans to pursue a PhD degree, she reported.

Harrelson and Stiles stressed the importance of marine safety training in the region. "Knowledge of salmon enhancement and management is real important to our region," added Teller board member Joe Garnie.

Cullenberg said the hiring process for a new Nome MAP agent will get under way in the next couple of months with a committee composed of three UAF personnel, two community representatives and someone from the NSEDC staff. "It may take six months to fill the position," she said.

Facing the threat of being called off due to low participation in recent years, the 16th annual Anvil 59-Minute, 37-Second Challenge had some new life breathed into it when the Nome-Beltz cross country team toed the line Aug. 12 to race up and down Nome's most well-known hill.

While he didn't lead the charge up the hill, 18-year-old Dion Williams performed a blistering descent down Anvil Mountain to take first place in 23 minutes, 13 seconds. Williams was followed by cross country teammate Tim Schmidt, who posted a time of 23:27. Cross country coach Kevin Busk rounded out the top three at 23:29, while the team's assistant coach, Erika Rhodes, clocked the fastest time for women at 28:33.

BUILT FOR ICE (above)—The icebreaker Araon floats just off Nome's coast Aug. 13. The newly constructed ship made its second stop in Nome last week. Nome served as an embarking and disembarking point for the ship's research crews.

Icebreaker gives a glance into Korean culture, Arctic research

Glimmering new ship set to gather yearly data on Arctic conditions

By Tyler Rhodes

Nomeites may have thought the Coast Guard was paying another visit last week, but the large red and white vessel floating just off Nome's beaches actually hails from South Korea.

The RV Araon, a 6,950-ton, 360-foot icebreaker, paid its second visit to Nome after spending two months conducting research in the Arctic waters north of Alaska. The stops in Nome served as the embarking and disembarking point for many of the scientists and crew who worked to gather baseline data and conduct studies primarily in the Canada Basin several hundred miles north of Alaska's northern coast.

While Nome served as a port for the vessel for several days last week, the ship's captain took the opportunity to turn the tables and host approximately two dozen Nomeites Aug. 13. At the invitation of Captain Kim Hyun-ryul, the guests were treated to an exquisite Korean meal and a tour of the state-of-the-art, 2-year-old icebreaker.

With too deep a draft to be able to dock at Nome's port, guests were flown from Nome to the ship via helicopter. During its voyage into the Arctic, the Araon carried two helicopters aboard.

Designed to be able to cut through more than three feet of ice and filled full of high-tech labs and research equipment, the Araon allows the South Korean government to join the cadre of nations devoting increased attention to Arctic research. During its two months in the Arctic Ocean, the 50 scientists aboard measured everything from the profile of the sea floor to the different varieties of plankton present in the icy waters.

The guests from Nome were presented with a slideshow documenting the crew's work over the last two months before being treated to an authentic Korean meal. Testing their skill with chopsticks, the Nomeites sampled fried croaker (a fish that is considered a delicacy in Korea), kimchi, a spicy soup, fried cod that was nearly candied, mung bean pancakes, varieties of seaweed, radish, shrimp, a chicken and potato dish in a red sauce, and rice, among other treats.

Following the meal, the guests were able to walk off lunch with a tour of the large vessel. The group was walked through several labs,

"Lisa has always been there for us in Nome. She understands that we need to develop our local resources to provide jobs and opportunities for our youngest residents, and she's working to make that happen."

—Mayor Denise Michaels, Nome

"Lisa truly cares about Alaskan families. I know that she considers our best interests thousands of miles away in Unalakleet with every action she takes in Washington, DC."

—Donna Erickson, Unalakleet

"Lisa knows that small businesses are the lifeblood of Alaska. She recognizes that we can continue to provide good local jobs as long as the government stays out of the way."

—Matt Tompter, Nome

Lisa knows the challenges of life in rural Alaska. High fuel and transportation costs make simply providing food and warm shelter a challenge that many other residents of the state take for granted. Lisa helped double the funding provided through LIHEAP to help offset escalating costs, and she has been a strong advocate for utilizing local resources for energy. The region is blessed with natural resources that can provide local energy and the jobs needed for a vibrant economy.

Building sustainable communities is Lisa's top priority for the region. While jobs and reliable energy are critical, Lisa knows that we need to continue to invest in infrastructure and services that communities need to be healthy. She helped secure additional resources for rural water and sanitation issues. She also was a co-sponsor of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act and helped reauthorize the Head Start Act which ensures that our youngest children have access to high quality early childhood education.

Lisa will continue to fight for Alaska.

each dedicated to a different discipline, whether it be chemistry, biology, ice studies or geological work. Much of the research was dedicated to measure the impact of a warming climate on the Arctic ecosystem.

Some scientists worked measuring ice data-its thickness, movement and compositionwhile others analyzed soil and sediment taken from the seafloor thousands of feet below the surface. Other studies analyzed the water for its temperature, salinity and other factors. Much of the data gathered will serve as baseline information and will be compared with new data gained on subsequent voyages. Kyung Ho Chung, the ship's chief scientist, said at least three to four years will be dedicated to gathering the baseline data.

While this most recent expedition was the Araon's first Arctic trip, it was not the first time the ship has plied polar waters. In February, the icebreaker tested its capabilities in Antarctica, scouting for a location for a second South Korean Antarctic research station.

The $100 million vessel was commissioned by the South Korean government and was built and operated under a number of partnerships, including the Korea Polar Research Institute, Samsung Heavy Industries, STX and Hanjin Heavy Industries and Construction. The ship can carry up to 85 people and can travel up to 20,000 nautical miles or 70 days on a single fueling.

The Araon, which means "sea" and "all" in Korean, left Nome last weekend en route for its homeport in South Korea.

COACHING ON THE RUN-Nome-Beltz cross country coach Kevin Busk and team member Tim Schmidt make their way down from the top of Anvil Mountain Aug. 12 during the 2010 Anvil Mountain Challenge.

The 2 3/4-mile run takes competitors up and back down the road that leads to the White Alice towers atop Anvil Mountain. This year's race was slightly shortened as the turnaround point had to be moved due to work being performed around the towers to remove contaminated soil. Even with a shorter course, the race's record time of 22:17 posted by Ben Head stood firm.

The race starts with a long. straight climb up the flank of the mountain that can deceive runners as to how close they are to the turnaround point. The grade of the climb eases after the straight-away, but runners still have some distance to cover as they navigate a long switch-back to get to the top of the hill. Competitors found Charlie Lean at the top of the climb, who checked them in and sent them back down to Leo Rasmussen at the finish.

Runners ranging in age from 8 to 65 years old—and even one dog took part in this year's race which got its name from the amount of time it took Rasmussen to walk up and down the route in its inaugural year. The race is sponsored by Rasmussen's Music Mart.

It has been an honor to serve as your Representative, and I look forward to continuing to fight for your interests in Juneau. We in House District 39 are facing many challenges. We have some of the highest unemployment in the State. The fishing industry is still devastated by low returns. Our basic infrastructure such as schools, water & sewer systems, roads, and airports often fall into the category of deferred maintenance. Individuals and businesses are burdened by expensive heating oil & electricity. There is a pressing need for increased public safety in our communities. More resources need to be directed to drug & alcohol abuse prevention programs. Our elders have to leave their communities when they need assisted living and families are finding it increasingly difficult to live a subsistence lifestyle. Our youth are faced with financial & cultural barriers when seeking higher education. My focus has been to pursue the funds necessary to tackle these issues and to support legislation that benefits those of us who live in rural Alaska.

Council favors new rules for Belmont beach

By Laurie McNicholas

During a meeting on Monday the Nome Common Council accepted a recommendation from the Nome Port Commission to designate one section of Belmont beach on the Snake River for gold dredge operators who want to park there, and the other section for Belmont residents for recreational uses. (See related story on this page.)

The commission recommends the following.

- A property use line that extends off the southernmost property line of Lot 61A in Block 57. The northern portion of the beach would be designated for vessel mooring, and the southern portion would be posted for swimming and fishing with no vessels allowed.
- Signs would be posted that prohibit excessive noise and waste dumping per city ordinance.
- Ordinance 13.25.060 regarding overnight habitation would be expanded to include the Belmont beach property.

Ordinance 13.25.060 prohibits overnight habitation in tents, vehicles or other temporary structures and overnight storage of any personal property in the area bounded by the mouth of the Snake River on the west, River Street on the north, Bering Street on the east and the Bering Sea on the south. The ordinance defines overnight as any period of time between the hours of 10 p.m. and 6 a.m.

Mayor Denise Michels said the city is required to advertise the proposed ordinance expansion, and the Port Commission will need to conduct a public hearing on the matter. The council unanimously approved a motion by Jon Larson to accept the commission's recommendation and advertise the proposed ordinance revision.

In comments to the council, Belmont resident Daniel Scholten described the commission's rec-

Port Commission offers plan for dredge conflicts

The Nome Port Commission has come up with a possible solution to a conflict between Belmont area residents who use the Belmont beach on the Snake River for recreation and gold dredge operators who use the beach to park their dredges—and in some cases live aboard them. Docking space is limited in the small boat harbor.

During a meeting Aug. 19, the commission unanimously recommended that dredges be required to park north of lot 61A in block 57 to provide continual beach access in front of the Prospect Apartments and southward to those who use the area for swimming, picnicking and subsistence and sport fishing. The beach is nearly 600 feet long. The commission also recommended posting signs on the beach prohibiting refuse dumping, excessive noise and overnight stays on dredges.

The commissioners developed the recommendations as requested by the Nome Common Council following discussion of complaints about dredges from Belmont area residents at a council meeting on Aug. 9. In a letter to the council dated July 27, Daniel Scholten charged that dredge operators do noisy work on their rigs till 2 a.m., dump trash and honeybuckets in the river, spill oil and gas on land and water, and park dredges and vehicles on beach areas traditionally used for recreation.

"Children for the most part are not supervised in this area and they will play on the equipment here because it is in their area," Scholten wrote.

By Senator Donald Olson Tribute to Senator 'Uncle Ted' Stevens

My family, my staff, and I would like to express our heartfelt condolences to the families that lost loved ones in the Dillingham and McGrath area plane crashes this month. We'd also like to share our deepest sympathy to the family and friends and to all Alaskans for the tragic loss of one of our state's most influential leaders and one of the most powerful men in congress, former U.S. Senator Ted Stevens.

Also known as 'Uncle Ted' because of his fierce loyalty to our state and unwavering service, he brought billions of federal dollars to help build Alaska. Stevens had an immeasurable impact in the lives of rural individuals, families, and communities. He was an important player in the passage of the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act of 1971 and the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act of 1973. He allocated funds to build and develop necessary infrastructure and services in Alaskan communities such as airports, bypass mail service, the Denali Commission's village health clinics. telemedicine, fuel farms and sewer projects, Internet access for our schools, libraries, and health facili-Senator Stevens connected rural Alaska to the rest of the world and secured the necessary means to develop communities. We owe 'Uncle Ted' our gratitude and sincere appreciation for over 40 years of dedicated service to Alaskans and the rest of the country.

My wife, Willow and I were honored to attend Senator Stevens' Celebration of Life lastweek. We were very touched by the speakers and to be part of the ceremony. Two of my staff members had the opportunity to serve in Senator Stevens' office. Laura Lawrence and Loren Peterson both were interns at his Washington, D.C. office and are so grateful for the experience. Laura comments, "I had an excellent experience working for Senator Stevens. He utilized our talents and allowed us to choose topics to work on which were of special interest to us. He let us both witness and be a part of the lawmaking process and the excitement of our nation's Capitol." Loren remembers his experience as a college intern:"My internship with Senator Stevens opened the door to the political world for me. After the internship, I decided to study political science, completed a few political programs after college, and it basically has led me to where I am today."

Senator Ted Stevens truly cared about rural Alaska's people and communities. His support and legacy will continue to bless us for decades to come. He will be greatly missed.

Governor Proclaims August to be Aviation Safety Month

Being a pilot myself, I'd like to applaud the Governor's announcement declaring August to be Aviation Safety Month. Aviation is essential to the Alaskan way of life, relied upon for transportation, delivering supplies, recreation, hunting and fishing, and connecting the remote communities throughout Alaska.

Sadly, August has had the highest number of aviation accidents and fatalities in Alaska. Because of this staggering statistic, aviation agencies and organizations across the state have come together to support the Governor of Alaska's Proclamation designating August as Aviation Safety Month.

Education, audits, advanced safety equipment, and training have greatly enhanced safety awareness throughout the aviation community. Aviators are recognizing the need to be more alert in pre-flight planning, paying close attention to weather conditions and visual cues indicating that weather could change, and having respect and knowledge for Alaska's unique terrain.

We can make aviation safer for all who live in or visit Alaska by working together, following aviation safety guidelines, and making safety the top priority.

Building Strong & Healthy

Resilient Communities In efforts to curtail the suicide epidemic in rural Alaska, I'm so pleased to hear that the communities of Mountain Village, Shaktoolik, and Shishmaref will be receiving grants for suicide prevention programs from Division of Behavioral Health. Mountain Village is currently working with the state to develop and implement their community prevention plan. Shaktoolik and Shishmaref have developed partnerships with Kawerak and the Bering Strait Youth Suicide Prevention Project. Also from this year's session, the state legislature allocated about $200,000 towards suicide prevention. James Gallanos, the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services Suicide Program Project Coordinator, says the program is working on a new strategy to help communities with suicides. This new approach is termed 'postvention.' Postvention refers to actions or interventions after a suicide occurs. Its purpose is to prevent further suicides as we learn to cope with the losses we have already endured. The Suicide Prevention Program has been meeting with the Alaska Mental Health Board, the Advisory Board for Alcoholism and Drug Abuse, and the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium in developing postvention resources, which include online materials, training and preparedness for suicide response.

The suicide prevention program suggests using the following prevention examples:

- Tell your family members, young and old, that you love them
- · Stop and say hello to young people. Greet them by name, ask how they're doing, what they have been up to lately, and what they're interested in doing in the future.
- Be a good listener—let the person talk about their problems without judging them or making them feel unheard.

Farewell to Senator Stevens

We're going to miss him. Senator Ted Stevens was more than a senator, more than a politician. He was a statesman. He was "Uncle Ted." He took a personal interest in the well-being of his fellow Alaskans, and his love of Alaska and the nation was evident in his role as United States Senator from Alaska. The way he listened to and served his constituents should serve as a role model for all state and federal politi-

Ted Stevens had a fine-tuned staff who followed up on the business of government, but it was Senator Stevens himself who sat and listened to the people of Alaska. He visited his constituents in the far-flung, isolated and remote communities of our state. Almost everyone has had their picture taken with him. He rubbed elbows with us, sat at our tables, had coffee and shared lunch. He laughed with us, he helped us grow into a take-charge state. He personally cleared the red tape and brought what he called "the other white meat" to Alaska. He had clout and he used it for the good of the people of Alaska. We knew where he stood on issues. When he visited Nome he would make it a point to stop at just about every business and office to talk. He was genuinely interested in how we were doing and how our families were getting along. He always managed to laugh when the editor of the Nugget would tell him he should change parties and become a De-

Senator Ted Stevens died in the land that he loved, doing what he loved to do. He left us a great legacy and big shoes to fill. Thanks and farewell, Uncle Ted. —N.L.M.—

News from around the state

Compiled by Diana Haecker Bill Allen off the hook from child sex abuse charges

The Federal Department of Justice is not going to prosecute former Veco boss Bill Allen on child sexual abuse charges. Allen is in prison for his involvement in corruption cases against numerous Alaska politicians but faced abuse charges stemming from alleged abuse of a 16-year-old girl from Goodnews Bay. Justice Department officials have declined to comment on news reports quoting Anchorage police officials saying that federal authorities decided not to charge Allen in the investigation. U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski fired off a letter expressing her shock and dismay that this case was tossed out. She said in her letter that she along with other Alaskans wonder what powerful reason was behind the dismissal of the case. Allen pleaded guilty to bribery and tax violations and is serving three years at a federal prison in California.

Izembek State Game Refuge land exchange a done deal

A controversial land exchange was signed into law when Alaska Governor Sean Parnell put his name under House Bill 210. The legislation designates Kinzarof Lagoon as part of the Izembek State Game Refuge and authorized a land exchange with the federal government in which state land adjacent to the Izembek National Wildlife Refuge and within the Alaska Peninsula National Wildlife Refuge is exchanged for federal land to serve as a road corridor through the Izembek National Wildlife Refuge. Parnell called the land exchange a "tremendous victory" for King Cove and Aleutians East residents, who have fought for road access for more than a decade. They currently use a hovercraft for transportation between the communities. The approval of the exchange was pushed through Congress by Senator Lisa Murkowski and Representative Don Young in 2007. The land exchange was eventually rolled into the Omnibus Lands Bill, which was passed in 2009 and signed into law by President Obama in March.

Rep. Young on the defensive

With the Alaska primary elections heating up political debate, Alaska Congressman Don Young finds himself in the defense against challenger Sheldon Fisher. In the latest exchange of jabs, Young asserts his seniority in the Transportation and Infrastructure Committee and Natural Resources Committee and circulated an email refuting the allegation that he's ineffective because he is no longer a chairman of a full committee. In his email he wrote that after serving two years as the ranking Republican, he stepped down "due to the DOJ investigation because it was in the best interest for the Committee, the House and Alaska. Now that the investigation is over, and with the increasing possibility of Republicans taking over the U.S. House, I can focus on securing a subcommittee chairmanship that is important to Alaskan interests," Young wrote.

Pennsylvania man indicted for stealing fossils

A Pennsylvania man was indicted by a federal grand jury in Anchorage in a two-count indictment on charges relating to theft of fossil remains in Alaska. Robert G. Franz, 63, a resident of Plymouth Meeting, Pennsylvania, was indicted on charges of conspiracy and theft of fossil remains from federal lands. Franz is charged with having taken a segment of a mammoth tusk from public lands north of the Brooks Range and having conspired with others to make several trips to northern Alaska over the last few years with the intention of collecting prehistoric and fossilized artifacts from the Alaskan wilderness. The indictment alleges that these artifacts are the property of the United States and that Franz had previously received a warning that non- permitted collecting of these items from federal or state land was not lawful. If found guilty, Franz can face a maximum total sentence of 10 years in prison and a fine of $250,000.

FAA administrator Babbitt visits Alaska

Federal Aviation Administrator Randy Babbitt is touring Alaska this week for a series of meetings and events focused on flight safety, the importance of aviation in Alaska's economy and the overall aviation picture in the state. Babbitt is making his first trip to Alaska as an administrator.

Salmonella cases confirmed in Alaska

The Alaska Department of Health and Social Services has confirmed two cases of salmonella associated with shell eggs in Alaska. The two cases, one from Anchorage and one from Homer, both tested as a match for the salmonella strain identified in a national egg recall. A third possible case, a Girdwood resident who ate raw eggs in brownie batter, is yet to be confirmed. DHHS officials warn that salmonella can also be passed from person to person. Proper hand washing following using the bathroom, before and after food preparation, and before eating are the best defenses against the spread of the bacteria.

Johnston files letter of intent to run for office

ANCHORAGE AP- Levi Johnston, the father of former Alaska Gov. Sarah Palin's grandson, has filed papers to run for office in his hometown of Wasilla next year. Johnston filed his letter of intent Friday with the Alaska Public Offices Commission, a first step needed to begin campaigning. The letter doesn't specify an office but Johnston's manager, Tank Jones, has said Johnston's interested in a run for mayor or City Council. He did not immediately return a message Monday. Earlier this month, Jones confirmed that Johnston planned to run for office as part of a reality TV show. Johnston has had a prickly relationship with the Palin family since the birth of his son, Tripp. He and Bristol Palin recently broke off a short-lived engagement.

New Public Safety Building nears completion

Romenesko provides updates on city's construction projects

By Laurie McNicholas

Construction of the Public Safety Building is on budget and will be ready for final occupancy on Oct. 30, according to Acting Project Director Randy Romenesko.

Copies of his status report on the facility and other city projects to City Manager Josie Bahnke Aug. 19 were distributed at the Nome Common Council meeting Aug. 23. He said the substantial completion inspection by the design team of architects and engineers was slated for Aug. 25.

"The total funds spent for the project to date are approximately $8.4 million out of a $9.4 million budget," Romenesko wrote. "These expenditures include all land fees, design fees, permitting and geotechnical services, site work and foundation, and materials and labor. The budget projection anticipates the project being complete at the budget figure. It is worth noting the project is paying for technology improvements and a complete furniture package that was not accounted for in the original budget estimate."

Romenesko said the building is to be ready for temporary occupancy on Oct. 11. "The time between temporary and final occupancy will be used to debug all the systems in the building to allow the departments to move files and equipment into the facility," he added.

The following summary of progress on other city construction projects is derived from Romenesko's report.

boilers is ongoing. Equipment and materials for the project have been slow to arrive in Nome. The contractor made temporary arrangements to provide the school with hot water, and heat was to be on in the building this week.

The supplier of roof material for the Nome Recreation Center roof replacement project, Firestone, made a warranty inspection last month and noted no deficiencies in the roof materials or installation.

at a meeting on May 27 that complaints surfaced last year about honeybucket dumping, loud noises late at night, dredges dripping oil in the river and about one person urinating in the river from his dredge while kids were playing.

Hannigan suggested placing a portable toilet on the beach. Commissioner Charlie Lean said it would be vandalized and would encourage residency boats. Baker said port personnel already have a number of outhouses to monitor. She raised a question about charging dredges for parking on Belmont beach, adding that she doesn't think the port should charge them. Lean said the dredges will migrate to the Crowley area or elsewhere if charges are imposed.

"Do we own the land?" Commission Chairman Jim West Jr. asked.

"Yes," Baker replied. "[The city] owns the blocks west of the road after you drive off the hill." She pointed out the area on a map.

"I think it's a subsistence beach, and I launch a boat there at times," Lean said. The beach is a designated subsistence area, according to this excerpt from The Nome Coastal Management Plan, 2006 Plan Amendment: "The Nome Coastal District designates the non-federal marine waters, tidelands and tidal flats within the Nome City limits and the Snake River within the Nome City limits as designated subsistence areas" (p. 20).

The Nome Planning Commission developed the plan and is responsible for its local implementation. The NPC also is responsible for reviewing the plan annually and pursuing changes if needed. In regard to recreational uses, the plan says, "There should be areas that are set aside for future recreational uses" and "Pocket parks should be developed" (pp. 85-86). Designated recreation areas currently included in the plan are ocean beaches and two sites at the east end of Nome.

Baker suggested posting signs on Belmont beach to prohibit dumping trash and honeybuckets per city ordinances. However, on May 27 the commission moved on to other agenda items without recommending ways to address the complaints.

At the port commission on Aug. 19, Lean said he does not think it's a good idea for kids to swim in an industrial port area. Baker noted in a memo to the commission that a body of water can only be safe for children when they are supervised. "Young children should not be near the water without a personal floatation device and adult supervision," she wrote.

Baker's memo to the commission suggested identifying a 100-foot area in the center of the beach for fishing and swimming that restricts vessels to either side. Commissioner Jeff Darling said a 200-foot wide area would be better, and one boundary line would be easier to establish than two.

"The best places to fish are headlands, and that's where the dredges like to park," Lean noted. "They don't have a place to dock, so they are using the point that is best for fishing." He said it is important to maintain a space on Belmont beach for the dredges. "We don't want them launching next to Crowley at Belmont Point," he added.

Last Sunday at noon three gold dredges were parked at the Belmont beach directly in front of the Prospect Apartments. One of them had a tarp-covered shelter on its deck. Three trucks (one with a trailer), a van and two four-wheelers were parked near them. Northward along the beach were six more dredges at the water's edge with several vehicles parked nearby. High on the beach near the road were a number of small boats with motors.

Meanwhile, six gold dredges operated under blue skies in calm waters off the East Beach and seven dredges were at work off the West Beach.

Gold dredge mishaps

Baker reported that a gold dredge became high-centered in shallow water as it headed into the harbor in stormy weather Aug. 14. The dredge should have come in hours earlier when the weather turned bad, she added. She said West towed the dredge into deep water and then the Tricia B brought it into port.

"The next day a dredge broke free of Belmont beach, pushed upriver and its pole took out a power line," Baker continued. As reported in the Aug. 19 edition of The Nome Nugget, the incident took place during a storm and caused a two-hour power outage. A Nome Joint Utility crew retrieved the line from the river and repaired it with assistance from the Guardian, the city's new port/safety boat, and the Nome Volunteer Fire and Ambulance departments.

The port commission discussed setting rates to recover costs for such incidents. Lean said he had established fees for ambulance services that included the costs of fuel, equipment depreciation, supplies and inconvenience to volunteers. Baker said she would put together some numbers and bring them to the next port commission meeting.

The commissioners agreed to buy an inflatable rescue raft for the Guardian at an estimated cost of $2,000 including shipping.

Harbor master's report

The causeway was extremely busy in July with incoming cargo of 3,645 tons and with 696 tons outbound or overside, Baker reported. Gravel exported from the causeway totaled 25,617 tons. Inbound fuel totaled 978,564 gallons.

Gravel and cargo activity kept the barge ramp at the harbor busy last month. Fishing vessels and gold dredges occupied floats in the small boat harbor, with larger vessels using the sheet pile walls when they were available. Cargo for the inner harbor totaled 624 tons with 1,216 tons outbound or through (village freight) at

July invoicing totaled just over $238,784 for all port facility operations.

All five port commissioners attended the meeting. City Manager/Port Director Josie Bahnke ommendation as fair. He reported that 80 percent of the dredges moored on the Belmont beach were unattended during a storm surge on Aug. 15. "They didn't care," he said. "They need to be properly tied."

Scholten predicted that kids will migrate to dredges at the north end of the beach, and he expressed concern about the city's liability. Michels told him that parents have primary responsibility for their children.

Scholten said he saw the dredge that broke free of its mooring on Belmont beach and reportedly snapped a power line with its antenna mast during the storm of Aug. 15. Larson asked Scholten if he had seen the dredge hit the power line.

"No," Scholten replied. He said when the line fell on the boat it was like the Fourth of July and it was fortunate that no one was aboard. Nome Joint Utility System manager John Handeland later told the council that the two incidents—the dredge moving under the power line and the line dropping onto the dredge—may not be related. "The line did come down," he affirmed.

Handeland thanked the Nome Volunteer Fire and Ambulance departments for securing road closures, and he acknowledged assistance from the city's new safety/port boat the Guardian while NJUS crews repaired the line and restored power.

City vs. Larry's Auto

On Aug. 9 the council unanimously rejected a resolution to authorize a suit by the city against Larry Carter and/or Larry's Auto Repair for past due port storage fees and recovery of property. Parking space is limited at Larry's Auto, which is located across a street from the Port of Nome's small boat harbor.

Carter leased land at the small boat harbor to store his customers' vehicles from Sept. 1, 2002 to Aug. 31, 2005. Larry's Auto was destroyed by fire on April 1, 2005. The shop was rebuilt and Larry's Auto moved into it in mid-2007. The resolution stated that Larry's Auto began using Port of Nome property without express agreement or permission from the city, and that port staff began to send invoices to Larry's Auto based on weekly storage rates under the port tariff that the firm did not pay.

Carter told the council he does not park his customers' car at the site and he tells them not to do so. His wife, Kay, said it is the city's responsibility to place no trespassing signs and parking barriers on the property. She also said the city had refused a request from Larry's Auto to lease land at the small boat harbor for vehicle storage because vehicles leak oil.

On Aug. 23 council members were presented with a revised version of the resolution with the words "recovery of property" deleted from the title. They also received much more documentation in support of the resolution than they had been given on Aug. 9. Attached to the documents was a memo from Harbor Master Joy Baker rebutting some of the comments made by Carter at the council meeting on Aug. 9.

Larson moved to amend the last paragraph of the resolution presented to the council on Aug. 23, which originally read:

Now, therefore, be it hereby resolved as follows: The City Attorney is authorized to file suit against Larry Carter and/or Larry's Auto Repair, LLC for unpaid Port of Nome storage fees and accrued interest, and to recover all damages or other relief to which the City may

Larson said it is not economical to involve the city attorney in a suit for $6,029, the amount the resolution says is due from Larry's Auto. He said he would rather place the suit in small claims court and let Magistrate Brad Gater handle it.

Councilman Stan Andersen said the court is still going to ask for an attorney. Larson replied that Baker can do it. Michels asked Larry and Kay Carter whether they wanted to say anything. They indicated they did not.

The council approved the amendment by a 4-1 margin. Councilwoman Mary Knodel voted no. Councilman Jerald Brown was absent.

'We got a lot more information we did not have the last time," Andersen said of the documentation provided with the revised resolution. He said the new information includes a section of the port tariff that lists weekly storage rates per square foot for the use of port property, and Baker's report that port customers have asked her how the city can forgive charges for a company using port property when others are paying for its use.

"I don't think the city or the port has done due diligence in collecting this or deciding if it is due," Knodel said. She said the port tariff says if a bill is not paid in 30 days, the port director has the right to take the property, so if Larry's Auto didn't pay, the port director should have taken the property away.

Larson said the property (vehicles) would be different from day to day and if they are not abandoned, the port director could not take them.

Knodel replied that the vehicles would be Carter's property because they are in his care, and whatever was parked there should have been taken. The tariff says no credit will be extended to those who don't pay their bills, but the port and city did extend credit to Carter, she added.

Andersen noted that the city has gone through several city managers in recent years and a period when others had tried to run the port.

"We need to be sure that policies and procedures are followed," Michels noted.

Knodel said she doesn't think the number of city managers is relevant. "If things don't get done, it's not due diligence," she added.

Andersen, Larson, Randy Pomeranz and Jim West Jr. voted in favor of the resolution to authorize a suit against Larry's Auto for past due port storage fees, while Knodel voted against it.

The council received copies of a memo from Baker to City Manager Josie Bahnke dated Aug. 17 accompanied by photos of several vehicles tightly parked in front of Larry's Auto. The memo states that some of the vehicles shown in the photos are parked in the Right of Way along the north end of Belmont Street within the small boat harbor.

Ordinance adopted

The council approved an ordinance to lease an additional 152 square feet of office space at the Gold Hill Tutit Ininat Child Care Building to Kawerak for the Head Start Program at a rate of $2 per square foot per month following a public hearing during which no one testified. The lease addendum will take effect Sept. 1 and extend through Dec. 31, 2010 when Kawerak's lease expires.

Larson bows out

Larson announced near the end of the meeting that he will not file for re-election to another term on the council. He encouraged others to run in his place for Seat F, a three-year term, in the municipal election scheduled Oct. 5. Council seats currently held by Brown (Seat E, a three-year term) and by West (Seat B, a one-year term) also are up for election.

trical upgrades at the Recreation Center have been completed and should be available for bidding in the next month. The proposed scope of work is to replace and upgrade the lights in the entire building west of the bowling alley side, upgrade the electrical power distribution, upgrade ceiling fans, provide a new building sign and improve the gym's audio/visual system.

An inspection of the existing interior roofing material found that the system is in generally good condition, but there are some cosmetic damages. It is recommended that the system remain in place and be covered after the electric upgrades. This work may be done with city crews.

In regard to limited work the city would like in the bowling alley, it is anticipated that a change order to the base contract will be issued for any electrical upgrades required in the area.

Work on the Nome Swimming Pool mechanical upgrades is progressing well, but problems have been found in the main air intake and exhaust louvers. The contractor has been asked for a price quote to make the required upgrades. The pool should be useable by Aug. 28.

All concrete work for the snow removal equipment building (perimeter wall and floor slab) was completed in late July and early August. A steel frame has been erected, and insulated panels will be installed in early September as crews are released from the Public Safety Building. It will take two weeks to install the wall and roof panels, after which the building will be watertight.

All mechanical, HVAC, fuel and electrical materials are scheduled to arrive by barge in early September. Mechanical and electrical contractors on the Public Safety Building are scheduled to install equipment in September and October. The snow removal equipment facility will be fully functional by Nov. 1.

Nome remembers Uncle Ted and his accomplishments

Former U.S. Sen. Ted Stevens, known to many Alaskans as "Uncle Ted," died in an airplane crash 17 miles north of the village of Dillingham in southwest Alaska on Aug. 9.

Stevens, 86, was the longest serving Republican in the U.S. Senate until his defeat in 2008 after 40 years of service.

That Stevens left Alaska a much better place by having served well in Washington has been acknowledged from all levels since Aug. 9. In Nome and rural Alaska, Stevens' accomplishments in infrastructure are basic and obvious in the availability of energy, roads, public buildings and human services funding. After the televised ceremonies honoring Stevens and marking his death, Nomeites reflected on the good that Stevens accomplished during his years of public service. Many remembered Stevens with affection.

Stimpfle said.

While he tended large priorities, Stevens or his staff also saw to meeting individual needs and connecting with people.

"When he came to our restaurant, he was warm and friendly," Tomter said. "He had a dish of ice cream. He even wrote us a personal note thanking us for our hospitality. Lots of politicians have gone through here, but he was the only one to write us a personal note."

Tomter's spouse remembers the note from Stevens. "Yes, he even spelled my name right, Jeri Ann Tomter said. "It was really sad to hear what happened, he did so much for Alaska. He told us he was proud of what we had built in Nome. He was very encouraging.'

Indeed, Stevens was well known for his four- by six-inch cards bearing a U.S. Senate seal that he would

"I think he kept the Secret Service in a tailspin. They would try to keep him corralled, but when he would see someone he wanted to chat with, he would dart off."

- John Handeland

"He knew the values of all the political system. Ted taught me a lot of things," Leo B. Rasmussen, a former mayor of Nome, said. "He was ultimately gracious."

But it's a well-known fact that Stevens could be feisty. Ask Pres. George Bush—either of them.

"I was in Sen. Stevens' office once when the President called,' Rasmussen said. "Stevens said, 'Now look, George, I won't do that and I can't. You are going to have to change your ways.'

"All Alaskans' lives are better because of Ted Stevens. He was so sure of himself and effective in the Senate that he was able to get money for infrastructure and economic development on the Seward Peninsula and local community improvements like send to constituents after a visit or on special occasions, John Handeland said. "He kept in touch with Alaska and Alaskans. When you would go to Washington, D.C., he had all the Alaska newspapers in his office, and had read them.

Handeland said he became aware of Stevens' work when he reached voting age in 1985 and Stevens would visit Nome. Then mayor of Nome and now utility manager, Handeland spoke with Stevens often and was on a first-name basis. Handeland made 4:00 a.m. phone calls from his office to catch Stevens at the beginning of his day on the east coast, a good time to follow up project grant proposals.

On the phone or in personal visits to Washington, D. C., Handeland found Stevens always available.

schedule, he would come in for a few minutes and get a synopsis of what was needed," Handeland recounted. "Then he would bark orders to his staff on how to proceed to fulfill what we were asking." In later years, when he became President Pro Tem in the Senate, it became a little more difficult with the security around his office, according to Handeland.

"I think he kept the Secret Service in a tailspin. They would try to keep him corralled, but when he would see someone he wanted to chat with, he would dart off."

There were times when Stevens annoyed his staff by his lack of punctuality. He would wave off his handlers and stop to greet people he knew or didn't know and break protocol. If it took a little more time, so be it, was his attitude. Handeland remembers several of these occasions.

"One time he came for a public meeting in the Nome Mini Convention Center. Again, he was a little late. Myrtle Johnson, Joyce Galleher and other members of Nome Republican Women were in charge of arrangements. They were fretting about the time schedule when he finally appeared.

"Just the same, Ted stopped at the back to taste some Blueberry Delight dessert and took another 15 minutes talking with people," Handeland said.

'When he went to the podium, it was obvious that his coat was torn under the arm and going clear down one side. Myrtle rushed up and started fixing on it, but Ted couldn't be bothered.'

Monday, Mitch Erickson of Nome Chamber of Commerce applauded Stevens' business casual way of dress.

"For guys who hate to wear ties-I'm one of them—he made bolo ties acceptable," Mitch Erickson said.

As the 40 years of Stevens' Senate tenure went by, he kept up his pace to cover the bases in Washington and spend as much time in Alaska as he could.

"In later years, when one would have expected him to need more sleep, he could be in Beijing in the morning and Nome in the afternoon and keep working," Handeland laughed.

"What amazes me is with all he did for rural Alaska with the Denali Alaska that voted him out," Carl Emmons said.

"He showed us we are a conservative state. Who else would vote out the source of benefits?" Mitch Erick-

A walk through Nome and surrounding villages, looking this way and that, makes Stevens' benefits obvious: in Nome, a new power generation plant, a community development quota fishing program that pumps money into Seward Peninsula and Western Alaska's coastal communities, harbor improvements that potentially put Port of Nome in the running for a U.S. Coast Guard installation and decreased the cost of landing freight, to name a few items in the economic development category.

Stevens' work helped to improve quality of life in rural villages with projects such as sewer and water systems, clinics and bulk fuel storage.

"Ted secured funding for us to build roads to somewhere—that do go somewhere in our region," Handeland said, and the CDQ fishery program has had major impact on and used it well."

Indeed, one of Stevens' major legacies is the Denali Commission that oversees spending in rural Alaska. It has injected a billion dollars into such infrastructure improvements.

"We would have liked to have him for another 100 years," Handeland said. "I just hope that God has put him on some committee up there so he can continue to help Alaska and the nation."

Ironically, Stevens established the Medallion Foundation to focus on air safety and established a supplemental fund to improve airports.

He lost his life on a fishing vacation when a DeHavilland DHC-3 Otter aircraft went down in bad weather the evening of Aug. 9 near Dillingham in southwest Alaska. Four other passengers died in the crash. Four passengers survived.

Stevens had lost his Senate seat to current U.S. Senator Mark Begich in 2008 following a conviction on corruption charges that was later thrown out of court.

In order to compile a photo exhibit called Village Survival - the 2010 convention theme - the Alaska Federation of Natives launched a call for photos from Alaska Natives. The exhibit is intended to engage convention participants in a dialogue about the resilience and vibrancy of village communities across urban and rural Alaska. AFN president Julie Kitka said that they hope to inspire members of the Native communities to use photography as a method to provoke thought and discussion about the issues being addressed by the Convention theme and to expand the role of the arts at the Convention. Uranium is above and below ground in Wales

Officials say threat is low, from long-term exposure

By Tyler Rhodes

Whether they scoop it out of the local creek or draw it from the tap at the washeteria, the water used by Wales residents is more than likely to contain uranium.

Saying the threat to public health is minimal and would require years of exposure, state and federal officials are recommending that residents continue using the municipal water supply for at least another year until a filtering system can be put in place.

Recent follow-up tests conducted by the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation indicate that both surface and ground-water sources—used in the village for everything from coffee and soup to laundry and showers—contain low-level concentrations of the radioac-

now it doesn't matter, wherever you get it, you're still getting uranium," Wales Mayor Frank Crisci said Aug. 19.

But it's not the uranium's radioactivity that concerns public health officials. Joe Sarcone, the Alaska regional representative for the federal Agency for Toxic Substances and Disease Registry, said the word uranium brings to mind the enriched substance used for nuclear power and weapons. "Right away we think of radioactivity, and it's alarming," he said. "I think it's completely reasonable and logical response."

But with naturally occurring uranium, which is what has been found in Wales, Sarcone said the radioactivity is minimal. "It's not a concern on the radioactivity side," he said. "But it's also a chemical, and any chemical in significant concentrations can cause health effects."

Tests conducted in recent weeks and earlier in the year show that the uranium in the two wells that supply the city's water tank is just above what the U.S. Environmental Protecthat was previously used to treat water from Gilbert Creek. Gilbert Creek and Mission Creek, while still used by some, played a larger role in Wales' water supply before the wells were brought online.

That filter, however, won't be up and running again for at least a year. Phillips said the filter may have previously eliminated the uranium from the Wales drinking water, but said he Seward Peninsula were first discovered in early July when test results from samples taken over several months came back reporting uranium levels just above the legal standard. The tests came in Wales' second year of using wells as the community's water source as opposed to area creeks.

The results surprised both Mayor Crisci and DEC officials who said they had never previously encountered uranium problems with any water source in the state. The finding prompted Phillips to travel to Wales and test the well water at several points as well as Mission Creek, which runs near the well site. The tests showed that the uranium looks to be widespread in Wales. "It appears that it's in all the water up there, whether it's surface or ground," Phillips said Aug. 19 from his office in Anchorage.

The test on Mission Creek (or Village Creek as it is also known) also showed uranium, albeit at approximately half the level found in the wells. The finding leads Mayor Crisci to believe people in Wales have been drinking uranium for years. "It didn't take the well water to do it. They've already been drinking it," he said. "For the people who live here, we have been exposed for already 30 or 40 years, however long you've lived here."

For now, Wales residents will have to go another year using the water as it is. As Crisci was speaking on the phone last week, the village's 100,000-gallon water tank (the Nugget previously incorrectly reported that the tank held 500,000 gallons) was being filled with well water for the year. The wells are used just once annually to fill the holding tank. "At this point we don't know what's going on. All we know is we have the same water for another year," Crisci said.

Both Sarcone and Phillips said using the well water for another year is the most feasible and reasonable option at the moment. "At the levels [of uranium] we're seeing, we wouldn't recommend any change in the way people use the water," Sarcone said. "We don't feel like we're poisoning people by saying it's OK to be drinking this water," Phillips said. The two also stressed that visitors to the village should not be dissuaded from coming due to the water, noting the upcoming Wales Dance Festival.

Phillips said the risk from drinking the well water is less than that potentially posed by the creeks. While the well water contains more uranium than at least Village Creek, Phillips and Sarcone said the creeks are susceptible to contamination from other sources, such as bacteria from animal waste or other sources as well as human-caused pollution. Unlike problems associated with uranium, which both men say would likely take years of exposure to pose a threat; bacterial contaminants can make themselves known quickly. "With the surface water, they are at risk to these things that can make you sick in a couple days," Phillips

Before the wells, residents primarily got their water from either Mission Creek or Gilbert Creek. Last week while in Wales for a public meeting on the issue, Phillips gathered a sample from Gilbert Creek to be tested for uranium at the request of residents. Some residents continue to use the creeks for their water.

Despite recommending, as a public health official, that residents get their water from the protected well source, Sarcone said he understands that some will prefer to use the streams. "Collecting water from traditional sources is as much a customary and traditional practice as collecting subsistence food and plants," Sarcone said.

The wells in question are approximately 60 feet deep and were drilled in 2000 and 2001. The wells were first used to fill the water tank in 2007-2008. The village's school, clinic and washeteria are all served by water lines from the tank. Many residents in the village get water from their homes by filling up tanks at the washeteria.

Mayor Crisci said the city's sale of washeteria tokens has dipped since the uranium was discovered and the Bering Strait School District had not decided yet if it was going to buy water from the city. Due to EPA requirements, Crisci said the city will need to post signs every 90 days informing the public that the elevated uranium levels exist in the

The mayor said the city is considering a class action lawsuit in regard to the matter, but said it was undetermined at the time who would be named in the suit. In an Aug. 4 fax, Crisci said the city was soliciting offers of legal assistance for help with the matter. As of Aug. 19, he said no response had been made to the request.

"It's not a concern on the radioactivity side, but it's also a chemical, and any chemical in significant concentrations can cause health effects."

tion Agency considers safe. With the levels found in Wales' wells, Sarcone said the risk associated with drinking the water would come from drinking it for years. "There's a small risk with long-term consumption of the drinking water. It's at a level that could damage a person's kidneys," Sarcone said. "We think, at the levels we're seeing, it's a very small risk. That's why we're not saying, 'Stop drinking this water."

Mike Phillips, an engineer and project manager for the state's Village Safe Water program, said the short-term plan to address the uranium is to bring back online a filter cannot be certain since past testing did not target uranium.

The discovery of the uranium comes as Wales is in the process of having a new washeteria and water treatment plant designed. Phillips said the new system will incorporate a treatment system for uranium. The project just received funding for the design phase. At the earliest, Phillips said construction could start next

Norton Sound silver salmon run in average range throughout region

By Jim Menard, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game

The Norton Sound silver salmon run is average in the Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts, above average in the Elim and Golovin subdistricts, and below average to average and in the Nome subdistrict so far this season.

Congratulations to Golovin commercial fishers who have broken the record for commercial silver catches this year. The Elim commercial catch is tracking ahead of last year's record catch.

The commercial fishing schedule through Sept. 4 for the Shaktoolik and Unalakleet subdistricts is from 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Wednesday and from 6 p.m. Thursday until 6 p.m. Saturday.

The commercial fishing schedule for the Golovin, Elim and Norton Bay subdistricts is from 6 p.m. Aug. 25 until 6 p.m. Aug. 28 and from 6 p.m. Aug. 29 until 6 p.m. Aug. 31.

In the Nome subdistrict subsistence set gillnet fishing in marine waters is open seven days a week until further notice. The fresh water subsistence area set gillnet schedule is 6 p.m. Monday until 6 p.m. Wednesday and 6 p.m. Thursday until 6 p.m. Saturday. Beach seining is not allowed.

The Norton Sound commercial salmon harvest totaled 113 kings, 58 sockeyes, 31,826 pinks, 114,671 chums and 46,569 silvers through Aug. 21.

The commercial chum salmon catch in the Kotzebue district totaled 212,833 chums for 60 permit holders through Aug. 21.

The open access fishery for the 370,000 pound quota of Norton Sound red king crab closed at noon on Aug. 24, and the last crab catches of the season were delivered by noon, Aug. 25. All crab pots must be removed from the water by Aug. 30.

A year later, trial begins over roadway death

By Tyler Rhodes

Just weeks short of the one-year anniversary of when Charles Bergamaschi was run over and killed just outside of Nome, Danny Aukon Jr. sat before a jury who will decide whether or not his role in Bergamaschi's death was criminal.

As The Nome Nugget went to press Tuesday, the second day of Aukon's trial wrapped up with at least two more days scheduled before its end. Aukon is facing charges of manslaughter, driving under the influence and leaving the scene of an accident without rendering aid. He has pleaded not guilty to the charges.

The allegations stem from what witnesses described as an all-night rabbit hunting foray between Sept. 5-6 that took Aukon, son Michael Aukon and Bert Karmun along the Council Highway before returning toward Nome in the early-morning hours. At approximately 5:30 a.m. Sept. 6, the elder Aukon struck Bergamaschi with his 1997 Ford F-150 pickup near the Swanberg Dredge just a mile east of Nome's main population center.

According to testimony from both Karmun and Michael Aukon, the trio left the scene after discovering they had struck a person and concluding he was deceased. None of the three contacted police until Karmun went to the station several hours later. Authorities were first informed of Bergamaschi lying dead in the road by Garrett Cooper who was driving by a little after 7 a.m. after finishing his shift at Anvil Mountain Correctional Facility

Jurors for the trial were selected Monday. Tuesday's proceedings included testimony from Cooper, Karmun and Michael Aukon, as well as Nome Police Officers Christopher Inderrieden and Ian Koenig.

Further testimony was scheduled for Wednesday and possibly Thursday.

Nome jumping off point for Chukchi research

Approximately a week after a Korean icebreaker pulled out of Nome after conducting weeks of data collection in the Arctic waters north of Alaska, a state-led crew breezed in and out of Nome to begin baseline study work of their own.

The Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation study, which is set to spend up to three weeks roughly 25 to 30 miles offshore between Point Hope and Point Lay in the Chukchi Sea, could have perhaps benefitted from an icebreaker. Ice conditions in the Beaufort Sea, where the ship was on hire for Shell Oil, kept the Norseman II from sailing south, delaying the start of the expedition by two weeks.

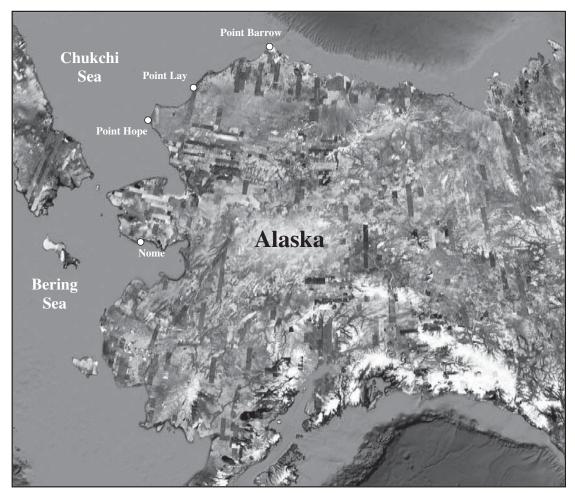

Despite the delay, lead scientist Doug Dasher was upbeat as the crew was loading the 115-foot ship Aug. 20. Nearly a dozen researchers will be gathering data from 30 selected sites between Point Hope and Point Lay in the first of a two-year study on the Chukchi Sea. Next year work is planned from Point Lay to Barrow.

The current effort is part of a larger program, dubbed the Alaska Monitoring and Assessment Program, designed to gather data along the entire coastline of Alaska, an undertaking that is itself part of a nationwide survey of coastal waters. Dasher said the scientists plan to hit two sites each day, collecting sediment samples from the sea floor and gathering water data. The crew also plans to study fish caught from each site as well as worms and other organisms from the sediment samples. "We're basically trying to get an overall picture of the overall health [of the section being studied]," Dasher said.

The $2.15 million Chukchi survey is the latest in a series of expeditions to gather data that will give a backdrop against which changing ocean conditions can be measured. Dasher said the information will be valuable as Alaska's offshore areas are scrutinized for possible resource development and monitored for climate change impacts. The area to be studied this summer is outside the section of the Chukchi Sea being considered for offshore oil and gas leasing. "We can compare one region against the other if development occurs in one. It also provides baseline data if any oil spill were to occur; we would know what resources are out there and could be impacted," Dasher said.

Dasher said the effort to gather data from Alaska's coastal areas began politically around 2000. The first actual survey was conducted in the south-central area of the state in 2002; work in southeast Alaska followed in 2004. Surveys were conducted in the Aleutian Islands in 2006 and 2007. Future work is planned in the Beaufort Sea, followed by Bristol Bay and then the Bering Sea.

Dasher said the timeframe chosen for this year's work in the Chukchi Sea was chosen to try and minimize any conflicts with subsistence activities in the region. Dasher said for each selected site, an alternative location has also been established, allowing the team to move on, yet still get the work accomplished if they encounter a pod of whales or other problems.

GROUND TO COVER-Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation researchers wil spend several weeks over the next two years gathering data from between Point Hope and Point Lay, and Point Lay and Barrow. The effort aims to establish a baseline against which changes can be measured.

Nome mayor appointed to Northern Water Task force

By Diana Haecker

On Monday, Nome mayor Denise Michels was chosen as one of 11 appointees to the Alaska Northern Waters Task Force.

The task force is comprised of local, state and federal officials from coastal regions. Its job is to create a joint state and federal commission responsible for overseeing the development of northern ocean waters. The group is to make recommendations to the Legislature by Jan. 20, 2012, with a final report due Jan. 30, 2012.

The task force was created with a oncurrent House resolution and aims to bring regional leaders, residents, businesses and interests in the region to the table in order to give all areas a voice. As northern waters undergo climate-driven changes, and receding sea ice in the summer, the Alaska Legislature reacted with the creation of the task force. "We recognize the strategic and security importance of Arctic waters, and the need to provide comprehensive support and infrastructure should new development take place," Speaker of the House Mike Chenault said.

The task force appointees are Senators Bert Stedman, R-Ketchikan; Lyman Hoffman, D-Bethel; Donald Olson, D-Golovin (alternate); Representatives Reggie Joule, D-Kotzebue; Bob Herron, D-Bethel; Bryce Edgmon, D-Dillingham (alternate).

Appointed from the state government are Department of Environmental Conservation Commissioner Larry Hartig, as well as the governor's fisheries policy advisor, Cora Campbell (alternate). Joining Michels as public members are

Diomede-to-Diomede swim planned for a worldwide cause

By Tyler Rhodes

To prepare for his trip to Alaska, Marcos Diaz was treated to a swimming pool full of ice.

After testing the waters, so to say, the Dominican Republic native decided he would wear not only one, but two wetsuits, gloves and boots as he attempts to swim from Big Diomede to Little Diomede this month. The nearly 100,000 pounds of ice, a gift from an ice-making company called Grupo Alaska, gave the nearest approximation to the Bering Sea as possible in hot and humid Santo Domingo. "We come from the heat of the Caribbean," said Diaz, dressed in a parka and knit hat, as he stood by the sea in Nome Monday.

Following in the footsteps of Lynne Cox, who swam the crossing in 1987 sans wetsuit, Diaz will attempt to cross the waters that separate the two Bering Sea islands and the nations of Russia and the United States. Diaz, an accomplished endurance open-water swimmer, is attempting to connect five continents with four swims. This will be the fourth leg of his journey.

Diaz already swam an Oceania to Asia leg, connecting Papua, New Guinea to Indonesia. He then tackled a crossing between Jordan and Egypt to connect Asia and Africa. For his third swim he crossed the Strait of Gibraltar, linking Africa and Europe. If successful, his coldwater foray would link Asia and North America. The swims have ranged from nearly five hours (the Jordan to Egypt leg) to two hours, 40 minutes to cross the Strait of Gibraltar. He is estimating a roughly two-hour swim to complete his trip between the Diomede islands.

Quick to turn the conversation away from him and toward his cause, Diaz said he is tackling the high-profile swims to draw attention to the United Nations' Millennium Development Goals, which include ending poverty and hunger, universal education, gender equality, child health, combating HIV/AIDS, environmental sustainability and global partnership. Diaz's swims seem to especially bring the last goal to light. "This shows we're not so far apart," he said.

The UN has set a 2015 deadline to achieve the Millennium Development Goals. UN Secretary General Ban Ki-moon has called a summit in late September in New York City to try to spur more activity toward achieving the goals. Diaz plans to be there to present Ban Ki-moon a petition his supporters have signed in support of achieving the goals.

Diaz was briefly in Nome Aug. 23 and was to fly to Wales the same day. From Wales, he and his crew plan to boat to Little Diomede. When conditions appear favorable, Diaz said he will attempt to swim from Russian Big Diomede to Little Diomede.

Secret gardens on tour

By Nancy McGuire

Nome is full of surprises. One of the most interesting things about this town is how we can manage to tuck away so many beautiful gardens. One would think Nome was a major agricultural center instead of a tundra town anchored in permafrost and hugging the shore of the Bering Sea.

A busload of green thumb aficionados gathered at the Anvil City Square Sunday afternoon for the annual Nome Garden Tour organized by Nome master gardener Cheryl Thompson. With Arnie Ashenfelter at the wheel the tour was off and rolling to the Nome-Beltz High School greenhouses where students from Nome-Beltz, Northwest College and NACTEC have practiced their horticultural skills. Kale, tomatoes, squash, strawberries, peas, onions, cabbages and other delights flourish in the heavy earthy fragrance of the humid tropical air. A quick trip across the tundra to Chris and Steve Pomerenke's working greenhouse made folks think of how they could provide fresh vegetables for the family freezer.

Icy View is a gold mine of secret gardens tucked away in willow groves and behind privacy fences. Keith Reddaway has a luxurious garden of blooms, herbs, and crucifers in two greenhouses and in outside container gardens constructed of wooden packing crates on top of freight pallets. Peter and Angela Hansen have a delightful relaxing retreat in the willows behind their home where the dahlias, daisies and delphiniums highlight the petunias, pansies and sweet peas. Kay and Jim Hansen have a yard planted with native-Alaskan flowers and shrubs, Sue Steinacher and Glen Pardee have a greenhouse and willow contemplative garden that is bursting with blooms.

In town there are greenhouses and container gardens galore. Julian Clements at the Munaqsri Center keeps a fine assortment of fresh garden vegetables available to the residents, The Little Sisters of Jesus have a glassed-in porch abundant with petunias and blue lupines that still have vigorous blooms. Gale and Henry Hagemeyer have their upper and lower decks lined with pots of blooming flowers. Richard Beneville has a porch-full of petunias.

MK Romberg and Gary Knuepfer have a garden of edible tundra plants, lots of flowers and brilliant Livingston daisies, an artistic driftwood fence and what is becoming quite the rage— a moss lawn!

Abby and Dan Bachelder have an abundance of herbs amidst the variety of plants in their greenhouse.

The fully loaded school bus lumbered out of town and over the Dexter Pass Road past a few grazing muskoxen and on to Amy and Larry Smithhisler's camp to experience Amy's artistic flair with garden antique décor and rock landscaping. Smithhislers' greenhouse has beans and tomatoes and a profusion of beautiful blooms.

The intrepid gardeners boarded the bus for the grand finale'— a potluck at Cheryl Thompson's home. Cheryl grows everything. If it can be grown in Nome, Cheryl has it in her garden - zucchini, pumpkins, strawberries, tomatoes, chard, cabbage, lettuce, broccoli, Brussels sprouts, parsley, currents, raspberries, etc. By far the best reward was Roger's Thompson's grilled salmon. The soup, pasta, salads, breads, deserts and friendly company were the perfect end to another Nome garden tour. Cheryl, who teaches gardening at the Northwest Campus has been organizing this tour for many years. She says," I think it's been about 10 years that we have been doing this, and each year we have more and more beautiful gardens to see.

Low back Pain: Know the signs of serious problems

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Sudden low back pain is one of the most common reasons people see their primary care physician. Though there are many possible causes of low back pain, most are not dangerous and resolve with conservative treatments. Sometimes the pain is caused by a seriunderlying Knowing the difference between the signs of serious and inconvenient causes of back pain can help you determine when to go to the doctor for help.

The most common form of low back pain is caused by a low back strain. The strain is caused by an unstable twist of the lower back causing a strain or tear of the tendons and muscles that run along the lower spine. The pain begins as a small twinge on one side of the lower back followed by a painful spasm of low back muscles on the affected side.

The pain from a low back strain can last for several days or weeks. There is no specific treatment that relieves the discomfort faster than any other. Despite years of research the only advice that is supported by good evidence is to avoid bed rest. The pain of a low back strain worsens with prolonged sitting or lying flat. Staying active helps mobilize lactic acid and loosen cramped muscles. Patients may continue a regular exercise schedule though specific exercises may need to be modified to avoid further discomfort. Ice packs applied to the affected area can also relieve inflammatory pain.

Low back pain seems to be less severe, and resolves faster, in people who keep their stomach muscles strong and remain physically active, avoid smoking, maintain a healthy weight, and avoid repetitive lifting and twisting at the same time. Berry buckets are a little heavier this year. After picking berries, remember to lift with the knees.

Other available treatments inibuprofen (Motrin), naproxen (Aleve), acetaminophen (Tylenol), muscle relaxants, and steroid bursts. While these medications help some people, adverse side effects prevent their recommended use in everyone.

Manual therapies including chiropractic care, physical therapy, ultrasound therapy, osteopathic manipulation, and transcutaneous electric nerve stimulation (TENS) may be helpful.

Often patients try multiple therapies before they find a therapy that works or the pain resolves. It is impossible to say that one therapy is better than another because regardless of the therapy chosen, the back pain in 90 out of every 100 people with a low back strain will resolve within six weeks.

X-rays, CT scans, or MRI scans of the spine are indicated only when there is evidence that the back pain is caused by a problem more serious than a back strain. Though an X-ray, CT scan, or MRI may sound helpful, imaging often raises more questions than it answers. Unless there are signs of a more serious problem, special imaging adds very little to the diagnosis or approach to treatment.

On the other hand, patients with low back pain that is associated with signs of serious illness should consult their doctor about appropriate studies to identify the cause. Serious signs of illness that can occur with low back pain include: sudden loss of bowel or bladder function

- · unexplained fever
- radiation of pain down a leg past the knee
- pain after a fall or blow to the back
- · weakness or numbness in the thighs, legs, or feet • pain with urination or blood in
- the urine • unexplained weight loss
- redness or swelling over the
- pain lasting longer than 4 weeks.

Your primary care provider can ensure these symptoms are not a sign of meningitis, kidney stones, nerve compression, cancer, spine fracture, bacterial abscess, or other similar illness.

The best way to avoid having to deal with back strain or back pain is to treat your back with respect. Maintaining a healthy weight and remaining physically active while living a healthy lifestyle contribute greatly to maintaining a strong and happy back. Keeping good posture, strengthening core muscles, and using appropriate lifting techniques will also prove helpful.

College Students and Medical Care What You Should Know...

Indian Health Services provides a limited amount of funding to Norton Sound Health Corporation for the medical care you receive within our region. Unfortunately, NSHC does not have funds available to pay for the medical care you may receive while attending school outside of our service unit.

If you are attending college in Alaska:

- Register at the local IHS hospital ("Native Hospital") as soon as possible. Be sure to bring your State ID card, as well as a Tribal ID, Certificate of Indian Blood, or BIA card. Some hospitals provide registration on-campus at the beginning of the school vear - keep an eve out toi an IHS hospital booth when you are registering for
- Inform the IHS hospital that you are a college student and ask if they have a Student Handbook which should contain important information on their requirements and your responsibilities regarding medical care. Familiarize yourself with their requirements... if you do not follow their instructions, you will receive a bill from them that NSHC will not be able to help cover.
- · If a Student Handbook is unavailable, ask what you should do if you need to be seen, both during an emergency and for routine care.

If you are attending college outside the State of Alaska:

The Alaska Native Medical Center (ANMC) Contract Health Services (CHS) Student Medical and Dental Program grants approval of payment for the medical care you may receive while attending college outside the State of Alaska. However, CHS funds are limited so you must follow their requirements in order for ANMC CHS to authorize payment. Some important things to remember:

Funding is limited to eligible Alaska Native/American Indian students, student's spouse, and legal dependents.

- You must be attending a vocational, technical or academic program on a full-time basis; a letter of verification from the school will be required.
- You must maintain your Alaska residency.
- ANMC CHS will not cover routine care (i.e. physicals, vision, etc); they will only authorize payment for "acute medical conditions requiring immediate care and treatment." Students will be responsible to contact ANMC CHS to get pre-authorization before the start of treatment.
- · An IHS hospital ("Native Hospital") must be used if available. Visit the Indian Health Services http://www.ihs.gov/index.cfm?module=AreaOffices to review the list of facilities.

- In emergency situations, you or a family member must contact ANMC CHS at 1-800-478-1636 within 72 hours after the start of emergency medical treatment. After hours, you can leave a message stating your full name, date of birth and a contact number.
- ANMC CHS will need your medical records from the hospital that you were treated at. You must submit a request for medical records from that hospital and have them sent to ANMC CHS.
- If the college has a health program or clinic, you will be expected to use their medical or dental services.
- Please remember that you will not be covered by ANMC CHS during summer break.

For detailed information on ANMC's Student Program, please call Contract Health Services at 1-800-478-1636 or your NSHC Patient Advocate at 907-443-4212. Additional information can be obtained from their website at www.anthc.org/ps/contracthealthsvc/. (At the top of the page, move your curser over ANMC and then click on Contract Health Services. Nome Police Department asks for assistance in vandlism investigations

Public Safety Announcement-Nome Police Department

The Nome Police Department is asking for the assistance of the public in the investigation of several recent vandalism cases

On August 18, NPD received a report that a window had been shattered in a vehicle parked across from Kawerak, Inc. on Seppala Drive. The damage apparently occurred over the weekend and may have been the result of the window being shot at with a BB or pellet rifle. Damage is estimated at $500.

On August 20, the Nome City Works Department advised NPD that two picnic tables had recently been damaged. It appears that suspects jumped from on top of the tables onto the benches causing the benches of the tables to break. Each act caused approximately $200 in damage to repair the tables for public use.

On August 23, damage was reported to two vehicles parked in the same vicinity as Kawerak. Unknown suspects apparently used a BB gun to shoot several vehicle windows, causing significant damage. Due to the location and weapon used, it is apparent that the damage to the Kawerak vehicle and these recently damaged vehicles may be related.

The City of Nome has enjoyed a long history of freedom from these types of senseless acts of vandalism. The Nome Police Department requests your help in putting a stop to these acts and ensuring that those responsible are held accountable for their actions. If you have information about these, or any other crime, please call the Nome Police at 443-5262. Callers may remain anonymous if they wish to do so. With the help of our community, we can all work toward stopping these sense-

The Nome Police Department takes this opportunity to advise community members that possession or shooting pellet or BB guns within the City limits may be a violation of the Nome Municipal Code. Minors and the parents of minors who violate the code will be held accountable.

For more information, please refer to the Nome Municipal Code section 13.25.050.

Technology. He worked for the B.I.A. in 1959 to 1962 as their Itinerant generator mechanic serving 24 B.I.A. schools in northwest Alaska based in Nome. He and his wife Elizabeth (Nils) moved to Unalakleet in 1962 where Paul was general manager for UVEC for 37 years. Paul retired from UVEC on March 3, 1999.

Paul served on the IRA Council, the UNC Board as president, and the Unalakleet City Council, when it was first incorporated into a second class city. He served as the mayor of Unalakleet and was a volunteer fireman. He was the first Iditarod checker in Unalakleet and served on the Iditarod Trial Committee as a board member.

Paul and his loving wife Liz were married for 40 years, and especially enjoyed their time together at their cabin along the Unalakleet River.

In later years, Paul found love and companionship again with his special friend, Emily Nanouk. Emily and Paul were married in heart, spending time between Koyuk and Unalakleet.

Paul was preceded in death by his parents Paul and May, his wife Elizabeth, brothers John and Glenn, and sisters Myrtle, Henrietta, and Laurina. Public Notice of Work in Floodplain

The US Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) has received an application for financial assistance from the City of Nome for water and sewer improvements along the Snake River in Nome, Alaska. This project is known as the Snake River Utilities Crossing and will relocate water and sewer utilities that are currently supported by the existing Snake River Bridge with horizontal directional drill utilities below the channel. EPA has reviewed the environmental impacts of the proposed project and determined that the location of the project will be in the floodplain. It has been determined that there is no practicable alternative to work in this floodplain; however, given that the project would occur below grade, no conversion or loss of floodplain will occur. The basis of this determination is that no alternative locations exist and the services are needed to provide safe and adequate drinking water and sanitation to Nome residents.

MSPI program currently funds the participant kits for these trainings and trainer's travel. Up to now, in our district, Chevak has one planned for October at their school, but the dates are not confirmed yet. For more information about MSPI gatherings, ASIST trainings, the SAIPH coalition, Bethel Community Partners or suicide information contact Mary Johnson, MSPI Coordinator at 907-543-6716. I am confident that these programs will help in reducing the prevalence of suicides and helping communities heal and overcome the problems contributing to this very serious issue.

Sen. Lisa Murkowski is in the process of assembling a roundtable meeting in Bethel in the coming months. My staff and I would like to be a part of the meeting and to listen to folks from our district and their thoughts on this crucial matter. While we all try and work together to prevent further suicides, Gallanos pointed out a hard reality on his view of suicide prevention. "The communities need to be part of the solution and not wait for people from outside to address the problem; the communities need to do it on their own." Prevention begins in our families and communities. The life of every member in our communities is valuable. I'd like to encourage our leaders and parents to instill a deep respect for the life of every community member. When someone commits suicide, the entire community hurts. The Statewide Suicide Prevention Council held their quarterly meeting in Kotzebue from Aug.23 through Aug. 25. They took public comments on Aug. 23. For more information, please contact Kate Burkhat at 1-888-464-8920. I encourage constituents and organizations in our district to contact my staff should anyone have suggestions in combating the suicides in Alaska. It could be considered for legislation during the next legislative session. The statewide suicide crisis call center, Careline, is available 24 hours a day, 7 days a week at 1-877-266-HELP.

Little Diomede Transportation Issue

I am hopeful that the residents of Little Diomede may finally receive the benefit of consistent and safe transportation to and from the island. Along with several other agencies in the state, my office has been working with the Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development/Division of Community and Regional Affairs to seek funds to provide safe, consistent, reliable transportation service to the community. In the past, residents were able to fly out of Diomede with Evergreen Helicopters, Inc. whichprovides contracted U.S. mail air service for the community once a week if the weather permits. In the past Evergreen flew mail on a twoengine helicopter from Nome to Diomede with seat tickets available for purchase as mail weight allowed. Usually, this meant only one seat to Diomede and four seats returning to Nome. In June 2009 the two-engine helicopter had mechanical problems and Evergreen began flying mail only on a single-engine helicopter. While FAA regulations allow passenger service on a single-engine helicopter over open-ocean, as a policy Evergreen will not fly passengers over open-ocean, especially in the Arctic, on a single-engine helicopter.

Diomede has had no passenger helicopter service since, and for only a short time Norton Sound Health Corporation has been able to fund patients only travel in 2009. Their only means to get to and from the island is by a small boat during the summer. Now that summer is coming to an end, service by boat is almost impossible due to vast water and strong currents surrounding the island.

In the winter, the community normally uses an ice runway when the water freezes over. However, some winters aren't cold enough for the ice to freeze over.

I am very concerned about their dire need for continued service. Jamie Ahkinga, city clerk and a tribal council member of Diomede, has been corresponding with my staff and has shared some examples for the needed service. For instance, David Soolook, Sr., an elder who wasn't able to leave the island to be seen by a doctor recently passed away due to lung cancer. "By the time they found the cancer, it was already too late," says Ahkinga. Also, in the fall of 1998, six passengers in a boat presumably drowned since the boat has never been found and the passengers never made it from Wales to Little Diomede. Ahkinga herself is away from the island and says she and her family probably won't be able to go back to Diomede from Wales until October if passenger service does start.

Meanwhile, we are hopeful the community will have reliable and consistent, year round transportation soon. The Department of Commerce, Community, and Economic Development/Division of Community and Regional Affairs is the lead agency for this project and has recently submitted a grant to the Office of Aviation Analysis. The grant will seek to restore safe and reliable air transportation to Diomede residents. If funded, the grant can also provide the foundation to apply for future grant funds under the Essential Air Service grant program, under the OAA. Based on grant funding estimates, services will provide only one round-trip flight per week with only four seats available on the helicopter, which is the most basic air service. "Anything more than one day, space-available a week is great for Diomede" says Akhinga. We will continue to work with other agencies toward reliable air service.

Governor appointsts Carpluk to Education Advisory Task Force

Recently, the Governor announced his appointments to the Advisory Task Force on Higher Education and Career Readiness. The task force began work on a study of the college and career readiness of Alaska students and remediation issues in postsecondary institutions. The task force was created by the 26th Legislature through Senate Bill 221, which also set up the Alaska Merit Scholarship Program. Governor Parnell appointed Mike Andrews, Donald Bantz, Lenora "Lolly" Carpluk, Keith Hamilton and Fred Villa to the Advisory Task Force on Higher Education and Career Readiness.

I'd like to commend Lolly Carpluk, who is originally from Mountain Village and now lives in Fairbanks. Carpluk is the coordinator of the Alaska Native Teacher Preparation Project at UAF. She served as director of the Future Teachers of Alaska Program for the University of Alaska and instructed the Upward Bound Yup'ik Language and Culture course at UAF.

Carpluk has served in a variety of roles in education, including positions for the Lower Yukon School District, Kuskokwim Community College, Doyon Foundation, and the Yukon Kuskokwim Health Corporation. She earned a bachelor's degree in sociology and a master's degree in education from the University of Alaska Fairbanks. Congratulations to Lolly Carpluk on her achievements and success. It was a beautiful wedding. I wish them the best in their new life together. The marriage was officiated by Robert Sheldon, originally from Kiana, now living in Noatak.

I'd also like to wish my Chief of Staff Denise Liccioli a safe trip back to Delaware to spend time with her children and grandchildren. She will be leaving next week and will be available part time until January when she will return to the office full time. She and her husband Cliff and their two dogs will be driving through Canada and across the country. They plan to make several stops along the way, and they expect to arrive in Delaware in mid-September. She is excited and says she's never done anything like it. Have a safe trip Denise! Your work is very much appreciated.

Foster claims primary win

By Tyler Rhodes

While the state was just coming to grips Aug. 25 with the fact that it was going to be a long wait for the outcome of Alaska's Republican primary race for U.S. Senate, Nome's Neal Foster was getting ready to hop on a jet for Anchorage to huddle with fellow Democrats.

Fresh off his win in the primary and uncontested for his state House seat in the general election, Foster said he was being called to the big city to talk committee assignments. According to unofficial results, Foster garnered 831 votes district-wide to Vincent Beans' 601.

Foster, who is from Nome, essentially carried the communities in the northern portion of House District 39, which sprawls from Wales and most of the Seward Peninsula all the way south beyond the mouth of the Yukon River and the communities of Scammon Bay, Hooper Bay and Chevak. Beans, who is from Mountain Village in the southern portion of the district, won the vote in most of the southern communities. Interestingly, Beans lost by one vote, 51-52, in his hometown.

Foster ran as the incumbent after being appointed to the seat to fill the shoes of his father who died while in office after a long bout with kidney disease. Foster's House seat was the only local election decided in the Aug. 24 vote.

Miller/Murkowski race results are clear in Dist. 39

In the statewide race garnering the most attention, District 39 came to a clear decision, strongly backing incumbent Lisa Murkowski for U.S. Senate over challenger Joe Miller. As of press time Tuesday, state election officials were counting and evaluating approximately 15,000 absentee and questioned ballots in the race that was still too close to call. Miller's earlier lead of nearly 1,700 votes had narrowed to approximately 1,300 by

Aukon found guilty of manslaughter

By Tyler Rhodes

A chapter in the sad tale of a dark road, too much drinking and a deadly collision came to a close Aug. 26 when a jury in Nome found Danny Wayne Aukon Jr. guilty of manslaughter for the Sept. 6, 2009 death of Charles Bergamaschi.

Aukon, 50, struck Bergamaschi with his 1997 Ford F-150 pickup at approximately 5:30 a.m. on that dark September morning while driving on the wrong side of the road after a night of drinking. According to a deputy state medical examiner who testified during the four-day trial, Bergamaschi, who was 54, likely died instantly or within a few seconds after the impact. After stepping out of the truck and seeing he had struck a person, Aukon got back in and drove home without calling or telling anyone what happened.

The jury also found Aukon guilty of driving under the influence and leaving the scene of an accident while failing to render assistance to the injured. Aukon was also indicted on a fourth charge of witness tampering, however, that charge was dropped before the case went to trial.

It took the jury roughly two hours to reach the three verdicts, which when read by Superior Court Judge Ben Esch spurred muffled sobs in the courtroom gallery where relatives of both Aukon and Bergamaschi had sat for the duration of the trial. Sentencing in the matter is scheduled for Nov. 12 at 2:30 p.m. at the Nome Courthouse. The manslaughter conviction alone has a presumptive sentence of seven

School board mulls scores, grads and dropouts

By Tyler Rhodes

The Nome Board of Education received its first report Aug. 24 on the results of the district's performance on the state's standardized tests last year.

Janeen Sullivan, the district's director of curriculum and former principal of Nome-Beltz Junior/Senior High, gave

On the Web:

www.nomenugget.net E-mail:

nugget@nomenugget.com

the board a run down, sorting out the pile of numbers and statistics that determine whether or not the elements within the district made what was is deemed "adequate yearly progress (AYP)."

Sullivan started out by countering the state's report that the Nome Youth Facility did not make AYP. The state reported the school, which houses students referred by the court system or authorities, did not clear the hurdle due to only 50 percent of its enrolled students (three out of six) taking the test. The state requires that 95 percent of enrolled students—or all but two students if fewer than 40 are enrolled—take the tests which are administered in April each year.

According to Nome Public Schools Superintendent Jon Wehde, the district incorrectly reported the youth facility's enrollment data to the state, resulting in the failing grade. Three of the students reported as enrolled actually started attending the facility after the tests had already begun. They should not have been reported to the state as enrolled at the facility at the time of the testing.

Despite the mistake, Wehde said the state's report will stand as is. "It is irrevocably immune to change," he said. "If you factor in the correct information, [the youth facility] made it, but that is of no consequence to the State of Alaska. It was a clerical error on our part."

The state report shows the youth facility meeting the AYP requirements in all other categories, which include reading, writing and math tests, as well as graduation rate. Last year the district argued that the youth facility was incorrectly shown to not make AYP due to an error in how the state determined its graduation rate. While some students do graduate from the youth facility, most return to their home schools once their term at the facility is finished.

In addition to giving a grade for an entire school or program, the reports are broken down into several categories to show how segments of the district's population are performing. These subsets are delineated along ethnic lines, such as Caucasian, African American and Alaska Native. Data is also singled out for students with disabilities and economically disadvantaged students.

At Nome-Beltz, students in all categories met the AYP goals. At Nome Elementary School, the school as a whole failed to hit the target on the reading and writing tests while scoring proficient in math. The results within the Alaska Native population at the school mirrored the results for the school as a whole. Caucasian, multi-ethnic and economically disadvantaged elementary students were reported to have made the cut in both the language and math categories. There were too few special-needs, Hispanic, Asian or African American elementary students taking the test for their results to be revealed. For privacy reasons, the state will not release data for a category if only a few students make up that group.

David Keller, the elementary school's new principal, said efforts this year will focus on improving the school's result for 2010-2011. He said the school has a restructured fifth- and sixth-grade program and will have a refocused tutoring program through Nome Eskimo Community. Keller also spoke of the need to address the social and emotional needs of the students. "If they come in scared or angry, they are not going to improve

Dear Editor,

It is not too late! Friday, September 10, 4:30 p.m. is the candidate filing deadline for our municipal elections. There are three seats on the Nome Common Council, two on the Utility Board, and three School Board seats.

From the ad running in the Nugget, I got the impression that all persons listed had filed for re-election. I was wrong. It was a listing of seats up for election and the current office holders.

In fact, as of this writing, only three people have signed up - all incumbents: Jerald Brown (Common Council), Fred Moody (Utility Board), Wilma Osborne (School

Granted, sometimes whether or not to file is a strategic waiting game on the part of some. Why wait? If you have an interest in serving Nome in any of these important positions, file now!

Nome citizens are public spirited and active. Too often, though, we may believe we don't have the education, background, or support to seek public office.

However, in the past several years, we have all seen the deep commitment to the well-being of our city through citizen participation in community events, responses to those in need, attendance and speaking out in public hearings and at town hall meetings. Nomeites have courage, commitment and a willingness to speak out for the good of our community, especially for the good of our future — our children.

Every current and former office holder is a citizen concerned about this city. A feisty, very wise, pragmatic, and current official told me several years ago she would gladly not run again if someone with her same dedication to Nome would step forward to take her place. Now, that's a tough one! They're all tough ones. Responsible ones.

Do you feel strongly enough about more than one issue facing our city? Do you have an abiding interest in the continued long-term well-being of our city? Are you willing to learn about issues other than those with which you're most concerned? Ask questions? Hear answers and ask more questions? Do you talk to your

Listen up, students

It's the start of a new year. All shining new faces have found their seats in the classrooms round Nome and the Bering Strait school districts. The spic and span newly painted walls and gleaming waxed floors, the smell of paste and Pinesol combine with the renewal of old friendships and forging of new ones. New teachers, new textbooks and a fresh new year ahead, you are starting with a clean slate.

Do your best to take advantage of the learning opportunities at your fingertips. Take challenging courses that teach you to think and solve problems. Keep up with your homework. Seek help when you need it. Your teachers will take time to help you understand your lessons. Prepare yourself for class. Get to bed on time... no late night video games. Get up in time to eat a good breakfast and get to class on time. Your parents can help you with many of these rules, but the real motivation has to come from you, the student. Your job is to get yourself educated.

Remember, what you learn is yours for life and no one can take it away from you. And what you don't learn, well that's yours too. Have a good year and do your homework. — N.L.M.—

Compiled by Diana Haecker Two police officers killed in Hoonah

Two Hoonah policemen were killed by a gunman on Saturday. The slain policemen were identified as Officer Matthew Tokuoka, 39, and Sergeant Anthony Wallace, 32. Troopers say that at the time of the shooting, Wallace was on duty and spoke with off-duty officer Tokuoka on the street. Tokuoka was in his car with his family, when shots rang and Wallace was hit. Tokuoka got out of the car to help and was also shot. Troopers say that after the shooting, the gunman Hoonah resident John Marvin, Jr., 45, barricaded himself at his house on Front Street in Hoonah from Saturday night until Monday morning. The standoff ended when Marvin walked out the door and was arrested. The motive for the shootings is not yet clear. A Coast Guard helicopter transported one of the wounded police officers to Juneau and got Juneau police department's SWAT team to Hoonah via boat. Hoonah police, the U.S. Forest Service, Alaska Wildlife Troopers, Alaska State Trooper Special Emergency Reaction Teams from Anchorage, Fairbanks and Mat-Su as well as patrol troopers were called in to help. School was canceled on Monday and residents of Hoonah were asked to stay away from Front Street during the standoff.

After his surrender on Monday morning, John Marvin, Jr. was arrested and charged with two counts of first-degree murder. Governor Sean Parnell ordered state flags lowered to half-staff in honor and memory of Matthew Tokuoka and Anthony Wallace.

Robber killed in Anchorage

Anchorage police report that a man who tried to rob a home was shot and killed during the robbery on Sunday. The police responded to a call when neighbors heard gunshots. The officers found that one man was shot and killed and another man was seriously injured by a blunt object during the robbery. The injured victim was transported to a local hospital. The deceased man was one of the intruders and the injured man is a tenant at the residence, police say. No arrests have been made and police released no further information or names as of press time.

Man killed when running from the law

On Saturday, a man running from Anchorage police officers was hit and killed by a vehicle in Anchorage. Police had responded to the report of a domestic dispute in the area and as officers arrived, the suspect ran from the scene across Bragaw where he lost his footing. He fell on the southbound lanes and was struck and killed by a vehicle. The victim was identified as Peter Beatty, 24, of Anchorage. The police had warrants

Two die in plane crash

In the latest in a string of small airplane crashes this summer, two men were killed on Tuesday when their Piper PA-11 crashed nose-first into a sandbar along the Susitna River. Troopers identified them as Brandon Reiley, 28, and Seth Holden, 29. The crash was discovered when Alaska Air National guardsmen flying a training mission heard an emergency signal from the plane. According to the rescue coordination center, the guardsmen spotted a plume of smoke approximately 10 miles away and headed toward the scene on the Susitna River to investigate. Two helicopters were able to land, and guardsmen extinguished the fire and found the two bodies. The National Transportation Safety Board and the Alaska State Troopers investigating the crash.

Small plane makes emergency landing on highway

Troopers report that a small airplane landed safely on the Parks Highway before it crashed into a road sign and rolled into a ditch north of Trapper Creek. Pilot Kenneth Wasche, 43, and his passenger Koren Wasche, 43, both of Anchorage landed on the highway for 'emergency reasons," troopers said. Troopers say the pilot was concerned about fuel and decided to land. The plane came to a stop when the nose of the Piper PA-14 struck an embankment at Mile 137. Alcohol was not a factor in the crash. No other vehicles were reported involved in the landing or crash. The FAA and National Transportation Safety Board will investigate the accident.

Roy Agloinga appointed to state council on the arts

Agloinga, originally of White Mountain, is the chief administrative officer of the Norton Sound Health Corporation and is the co-organizer and founder of Tupagvik Inc., a nonprofit corporation. He formerly served as the mayor of the Village of White Mountain, as rural affairs coordinator in the Anchorage mayor's office, as tribal affairs director for Kawerak, Inc., and as a public information specialist for the University of Washington.

Planning panel OKs access ramp for elder

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome Planning Commission met Monday and approved a housing code variance on set back from the lot line requirements to permit building an access ramp for one of Nome's senior citizens.

The ramp will go on the east side of Edward Muktoyuk Sr.'s home at 705 E. Third Ave. RurAL CAP Senior Access Program grant funds will hire a crew through Nome Eskimo Housing Community Program with labor, materials and other expenses provided.

Muktoyuk applied and was found eligible for the project that will involve removal of an existing ramp at 210 W. Second Ave. and use of those materials to make a 30 ft. by 4 ft. access ramp on the east side of the Muktoyuk home, according to the variance application considered at a special meeting at noon Aug. 30 at XYZ Senior Center. The project will put a new landing at the southeast corner of the house at the top of the ramp, and install two new exterior doors at the southeast entrance.

Variance needed?

Nome building codes require structures to be five feet back from the lot line and 10 feet back from the street boundary. The ramp will be four feet wide. The house is approximately nine feet from the eastern property line, with sewer and water service arctic boxes sticking two feet out from the east wall of the house. If built as planned, the bottom of the ramp at the northeast corner by the street will not conform to the required five-foot setback but be only three feet from the lot line. Hence, RurAL CAP asked the planning panel to grant a variance to allow the ramp to go partially into the setback.

Commissioner Charlie Weiss commented that codes require a landing after 25 feet of length, and that he could not see how the ramp would not violate the 10-foot setback regulation at the street. Commissioner Randy Romenesko wondered why the ramp could not go on the west side of the house where there would be more room.

As commissioners leaned over the table to hear vacationing NEC housing program head Glen Pardy on Commissioner Greg Smith's mobile phone, Pardy assured the panel that he and the NEC crew would make sure the ramp did not project into the street setback. Pardy ruled out the west side of the house for the ramp as there are two oil tanks and stands on that side as well as a covered shed in the way.

The commission voted unanimously to approve the variance. Work will begin soon to meet a funding deadline. Commissioners agreed that if Pardy finds the street setback will be breached, he could come back with a request for another variance.

Francis S. Alvanna, whose house at 707 E. Third Ave. is to the east of Muktoyuk's, was duly notified of the variance request and attended the hearing, but reserved comment.

School board

their reading scores," he told the board.

Keller also said the school needs to develop support from several segments of the community, including parents, staff and the students, themselves. He also mentioned the inclusion of culturally relevant instruction. "It has to make sense to all of our students," he said.

Sullivan reported that the district as a whole did not make AYP in regard to the performance of special education students in the language and math tests, scoring only 22 percent proficient in both categories. Keller, who is the district's special education director in addition to being elementary principal, said the evaluation of whether students with disabilities make AYP is problematic. "Since AYP appeared as a component of the No Child Left Behind Act, I thought it was a poor way to track the growth of special-needs students," he said. "Not making AYP affirms they are special-needs students."

Conversely, he noted that the schools may need to question the categorization of students as "special needs" when they are able to meet the testing targets. "We are forced into this paradigm of evaluating special-needs students in this manner," he said.

The high point of the report came in regard to Nome-Beltz and its return to making AYP for the first time in two years, and doing so by a large jump in its test scores. The junior high/high school saw its language and math scores climb by approximately 10 percent in each category. "Ten percent gains is remarkable improvement," superintendent Jon Wehde told the board. "To have that much improvement come forward in just a year's time is a significant gain."

New principal Steve Gast said Nome-Beltz will focus on several different areas to ensure the school continues to meet AYP as well as steer students toward graduation and success beyond high school. He cited continued support of a mentoring program as well as credit recovery programs for students who start to fall behind by not passing certain classes. He also said he wanted to see education plans developed for each student at Nome-Beltz as they enter the school in seventh grade.

In her report, Sullivan also touched on the performance of home-schooled students and the district's charter school, Anvil City Science Academy. Both programs continued their strong performance in making AYP each year.

Dropout/graduation rates addressed

At the request of board members, administration officials addressed the district's dropout rate during the Aug. 24 meeting.

Sullivan reported a rising number of dropouts over the past few years, climbing from 2.6 percent in 2004-2005 to 7.7 percent in 2008-2009. She said a mentoring program and clubs were developed at Nome-Beltz to help address the problem. Gast also addressed the idea of establishing a credit recovery program for students falling behind.

The discussion was spurred after board member Barb Amarok expressed her worries over the number of dropouts at a previous meeting. At the Aug. 24 work session, she read a lengthy statement summing up her thoughts on the matter. She said she felt there was too much an emphasis on punishing students who ran afoul of rules and not enough attention to the overall school climate in the past.

The discussion also covered the graduation rate at the school, which has dipped from a high of 96.2 percent in 2001-2002 to 73.2 percent in 2009-2010. The rate does not directly correspond with the dropout rate, as the two are calculated using different methods.

Tuesday afternoon. Overall, there are expected to be more than 25,000 outstanding ballots to be counted in addition to those tallied on election day.

In Nome, 103 voters cast ballots for Miller, while 137 voted for Murkowski. A closer look at Nome's tallies shows that Miller actually did carry one precinct, winning 55-51 in Nome's precinct No. 1. It was the only precinct he took throughout the entire district. Miller paid a campaign visit to Nome in early August.

District-wide, Murkowski carried much more favor, winning 612 votes to Miller's 240.

Sticking with the trend to lean more to the left, more voters in the district cast Democratic ballots than those for the Republican candidates. Voters who are registered as Democrats or Republicans are given ballots for their respective party. Independents and members of smaller parties are given their choice of ballot.

Scott McAdams, the prevailing Democratic candidate for U.S. Senate, also garnered the most votes in District 39. McAdams, who is currently mayor of Sitka, took 598 votes district-wide, beating Jacob Kern (279), Frank Vondersaar (237) and Fredrick Haase (159). Voters in Nome also largely favored McAdams.

In the race for Alaska's lone seat in the U.S. House of Representatives, incumbent Don Young easily gained Republican support in District 39 and in Nome. Overall in the district, Young won with 736 votes against Sheldon Fisher (64) and John Cox (38). Young also decisively won the primary race statewide.

Young will go on to face the only Democrat who ran in the primary, Harry Crawford.

Local governor/lt. governor votes mirror state results

As was the case statewide, District 39 voters backed incumbent Gov. Sean Parnell and challenger Ethan Berkowitz on the Republican and Democratic tickets, respectively. Parnell easily carried the Republican vote in the district with 623 votes compared to Bill Walker's 121. Ralph Samuels eked out 54 votes. Sam Little, the singing truck driver, only received 25 votes in the district.

A winter visit by Democrat Hollis French to Nome apparently did little to convince area voters. Berkowitz easily carried Nome and the district, taking 779 votes district-wide. Alaska Independent candidate Donald Wright made a decent showing in the race, picking up 305 votes in the district.

For lieutenant governor, Democrat Diane Benson easily gained the majority of votes in Nome, the district and the state. The Republican race was a much closer contest with Mead Treadwell also winning at the local, district and state level. In District 39 results, Treadwell was closely trailed by Fairbanks businessman and state Rep. Jay Ramras. Treadwell won with 340 votes district-wide to Ramras' 262.

Ballot measures

Voters also decided two ballot measures in the primary. Ballot Measure 2, concerning the notification of parents when minor teens seek an abortion, passed by just 26 votes in the district (1,158-1,132). Statewide the measure passed by 55.5 percent. In contrast, Nome voters were not in favor of the measure with 267 voting yes compared to 297 voting no.

The second ballot measure, concerning the use of public funds in lobbying or campaigning, failed locally, in the district and statewide. Nome voters cast 323 votes against the measure while 231 voted yes. District 39 voters panned the measure by casting 1,478 no votes compared to 775 yes votes. Statewide, the measure failed with 62.2 percent of the electorate voting no.

torney Bob Lewis, a picture emerged of a night of drinking, driving and rabbit hunting along the Nome-Council Highway by Aukon, son Michael Aukon, 20, and neighbor Bert Karmun. Testimony from the younger Aukon and Karmun gave a rough sketch of the three meeting at a friend's camp on the highway near Nuuk, east of Nome, and leaving sometime around 10 p.m., Sept. 5 to head east toward Council and hunt for rabbits. The trio went as far as the East Fork area, approximately 10 miles past Solomon, before turning around and heading back to Nome. Testimony indicated the three continued drinking beer throughout the trip.

Danny Aukon did not take the stand to testify.

As the pickup approached the east edge of Nome, near Swanberg's Dredge, Aukon struck and killed Bergamaschi. "All of the sudden there he was. I slammed on the brakes and boom," Aukon said in a recorded interview with Nome Police Department Sgt. Byron Redburn a few hours after the fatal collision. Over and over in the interview, Aukon repeated that Bergamaschi "came out of nowhere."

According to testimony from a former Anchorage Police Department Officer and vehicle collision expert, as well as Aukon's recorded interview with Sgt. Redburn, the truck was likely traveling between 35 and 40 mph at the time of the collision.

At the time of the impact, Michael Aukon was sitting in the passenger seat while Karmun slept in the back of the crew cab. Karmun testified that he was awakened by the collision and climbed to the front seat where he could see the father and son standing over Bergamaschi. Michael Aukon testified that he and his father looked at the body for less than a minute before the elder Aukon told him to get back in the truck.

Karmun testified that Danny Aukon told him to keep quiet about the incident so that no one would know what happened. Michael Aukon, however, said he could not remember words to that effect after the incident. Both Karmun and Danny Aukon were believed to be carrying cellular phones at the time of the collision.

In his recorded interview Sgt. Redburn asked Aukon why he did not report the accident. "Things happened so fast. I didn't want to get caught," Aukon told Redburn.

"Basically the reason you didn't stop and render aid is because you were drunk," Redburn said. "I stopped," Aukon replied. "I mean render aid by calling 911 and getting all the cops and stuff out there," Redburn said.

"I should have," Aukon replied. "Had you been sober and been thinking clearly you would have," Redburn said. "I would have. It's because I had been drinking, it's the reason why I got scared," Aukon said.

Around noon, approximately six to 6 1/2 hours after the accident, Aukon's blood was drawn and was later tested to show a blood-alcohol content of 0.141 percent. The legal limit for operating a vehicle is 0.08 percent; percentages above 0.2 are generally considered to show serious intoxication, a level of 0.35 to 0.4 percent can represent potentially fatal alcohol poisoning.

Brandi Barnett, a forensic scientist at the state crime lab, testified that using a process called retrograde extrapolation, she was able to estimate that Aukon's blood alcohol level near the time of the collision would have been between 0.210 percent and 0.291 percent, or an average of 0.243 percent. Barnett said those figures assumed that Aukon had not drank any more alcohol between the time his blood was drawn and the collision, and that his body had absorbed all the alcohol he had drank. In his interview with Redburn, Aukon said he had not drank since he had struck Bergamaschi.

Aukon also agreed to a breath test for alcohol at the time of his interview with Redburn. That test, which Redburn said was administered around 1:20 p.m., showed a result of 0.112 percent.

According to toxicology tests performed by deputy state medical examiner Robert Whitmore, Bergamaschi's blood-alcohol content was 0.243 percent. Police officer Ian Koenig testified seeing Bergamaschi approximately an hour before his death, appearing intoxicated but happy along the east end of Fifth Avenue.

In his interview with Sgt. Redburn, Aukon was pretty upfront about his state of intoxication. "Everybody's drunk?" Redburn asked. "Yes," Aukon replied.

"What were you drinking?" Redburn asked. "Beer," Aukon answered. "What kind?" he asked. "Coors Light," Aukon replied.

"Was anybody else in shape for driving, or is it safe to say everyone's pretty much hammered?" Redburn asked a few minutes later in the interview. "Pretty much," Aukon replied.

A dark moment on a dark road

Just where Charles Bergamaschi was and what he was doing in those few seconds before Aukon's maroon F-150 pickup struck him will never be known. Danny Aukon in his recorded interview with Sgt. Redburn said Bergamaschi suddenly appeared from the beach side of the road and was waving his hands above his head just before the impact. From the evidence it was impossible to tell whether Bergamaschi was walking along the road or running into it.

What is known is that Bergamaschi was struck near the south side of the road, and to hit him, Aukon had to be essentially driving completely in the south lane, the lane oncoming traffic would have used. It is also known that Bergamaschi was wearing dark clothing and was in or just on the edge of the roadway in an area where there is a large pullout between the road and beach. Had he been walking farther to the south in that pullout, he may have kept out of the path of cars.

Dr. Whitmore, the deputy state medical examiner, was able to give a long list of the injuries Bergamaschi sustained, but was unable to determine on which side of his body he was struck. Michael Aukon said Bergamaschi's body came to rest on the side of the road. In his interview with Sgt. Redburn, Danny Aukon said he called to Bergamaschi to ask if he was OK. Aukon said he got no response and didn't see any movement. He said he never touched Bergamaschi or checked for a pulse.

It wasn't until sometime just after 7 a.m. that another passerby took enough notice of Bergamaschi to stop and get a closer look. Garrett Cooper had just finished his shift at the Anvil Mountain Correctional Center and was taking a drive to "debrief," as he called it, after work. Cooper testified that he saw something out of the corner of his eye, particularly noting a shoe sticking out. He said he turned his car around and got out to take a closer look. He recognized Bergamaschi and flagged down a passing motorist and used his phone to call 911.

That call quickly brought police investigators to the scene. They were still mapping out evidence along the road when Karmun walked into police headquarters to tell what he had seen.

Sgt. Redburn attempted to have Karmun call Aukon and record the phone call. Two attempts failed when Aukon's wife refused to wake him for the calls. Redburn then proceeded to Aukon's house, which is located near his own.

Redburn said he found the maroon truck with a fresh dent on the hood and busted grill parked in its normal location. He found Aukon in his house in bed. He briefly interviewed Aukon in the house and then took him to Norton Sound Health Corp. to get a blood sample. From there the two spoke at the police station.

Defense: "Every single one of you have done it."

Attorney Lewis based his defense largely on the question of whether the fatal collision could have occurred between Bergamaschi and any reasonable driver in the area, whether they were sober or not. "Danny Aukon caused the death of Charles Bergamaschi," Lewis told the jury during his opening argument. "The problem is going to be, was it a crime or was it an accident?"

Lewis did not deny that his client had been drinking and driving, nor that he struck and killed Bergamaschi.

Lewis argued that drivers on the Council Highway often drive in the center or even opposing lane of traffic based on the road conditions. Whether it's wrong or right, he said, it is not an unusual practice. "Use your common sense. People drive all over this road without being impaired," he said in his closing arguments.

Lewis also gave two hypothetical examples of collisions. The first was of a driver running over a child while trying to get past an easily visible group of kids on bicycles in the roadway. The second assumed a driver traveling in the dark of night on an empty stretch of highway toward the Icy View subdivision and hitting a snowmachiner who was attempting to jump the road at a high rate of speed with the snowmachine's lights off.

Lewis contended the circumstances surrounding his client's situation were more like the second example than the first. Like an unlit snowmachine flying out into the middle of the roadway in the pitch dark, Lewis argued it was not reasonable for Aukon to expect or be on the ready for a pedestrian to jump in front of his car at 5:30 a.m. on the Council Highway. "Mr. Aukon's driving is just as reasonable as anyone's here in this room," Lewis told the jurors. "The question is, were you lucky enough to avoid the person jumping the road?"

Calling the idea of Bergamaschi jumping in front of the truck "ridiculous," District Attorney Earthman argued that by being as drunk as he was and being behind the wheel, Aukon was knowingly placing others at risk. "People know driving drunk is very dangerous because people get killed," Earthman told the jury.

Lewis also tried to argue that despite his drinking, Aukon was still able to properly drive his car. "Yes, he was drinking and driving," Lewis said. "Was he impaired? No."

Earthman countered by arguing that if the collision were truly an accident, it would not have occurred along the edge of the east-bound lane. "If it was an accident, it would have been in the middle of the road," Earthman said. "A substantial factor is Mr. Aukon is in the wrong lane because he is drunk." He pointed out that if even if the car would have been in the exact center of the road, Bergamaschi would not have been hit.

Lewis also tried to establish his client's innocence in regard to the charge of leaving the scene of an accident without rendering aid to the injured. Arguing that a dead person does not constitute an injured person, Lewis said the state statute did not require Aukon to try and offer help to Bergamaschi.

"That's just plain ridiculous," Earthman countered. "It simply doesn't make sense that if you just killed a person, you can just go home."

The jury apparently agreed.

Lack of coordination holds back sustainable rural development in Alaska, report finds

By Diana Haecker

In July the Denali Commission came out with a report to shed light on the barriers to sustainable rural community development. And the answer to that was found in the lack of coordination, at least at the federal agency level.

The report titled "Sustainable Rural Communities" comes at the request of Senator Mark Begich and after the well-publicized whirlwind tours of numerous United States secretaries, including the heads of the Departments of Energy, Housing and Urban Development, Education and Agriculture to rural Alaska in August 2009. The commission sought input from federal agencies to identify the barriers to sustainable rural communities in Alaska.

The agencies' comments said that Alaska's challenges consist of very little infrastructure, high energy costs and high cost of living, no water and sewer in many villages, very few jobs and a convoluted system that is not well-equipped to address the issues. One of the main findings of the report says that there is a need for a lead agency in Alaska that would bring federal agencies in "alignment." The report says, "Even with the best of intentions, agency personnel and program specialists often institute a 'top-down' approach." The report points out that this is evident in research plan development and implementation all the way through policy formulation. "Agencies tend to follow the past practice of internal plan/design preparation followed by a request for community input," reads the report. This needs to change and the agencies suggest that unless there is true collaboration at all stages of a new project, there will not be buy-in at the community level. As an example of collaboration, the report quotes the relationship between villages, tourists and national park lands. "In many areas of rural Alaska, becoming communities are comfortable increasingly with providing services to visitors interested in learning about their culture, community and surrounding locals and tribes feel left out in planning stages and only have an opportunity to comment on a drafted version of a plan or resource development project.

In order to make sense of all the funding resources available for Alaskans, the Denali Commission also said that there is a need for a coordinated central "clearing house" providing information on funding that is available by the many federal agencies in Alaska.

The report also suggests a regional approach to building relocation – is difficult because low ratio projects are unlikely to be funded. The Corps suggests developing statewide interagency plans for rock and material sources at reasonable cost to minimize transportation costs.

While calling for local financial commitments, the report also says that federal agencies should be focusing on the regional and community approach and provide the community what it really wants rather than what bureaucrats think they want.

Another barrier to sustainability is the lack of westerners understanding of the meaning of subsistence. "Subsistence and cash economies often are in conflict," says the report. "The epistemology of traditional knowledge is poorly understood and frequently dismissed by western scientists and decision and policy makers."

The report suggests developing a regulatory structure that follows the intent of Title VIII of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act. This requires a rural priority for subsistence uses when shortages or allocation decisions between user groups require accommodation or a preference. It calls for an end to the confusion stemming from the overlap between State and Federal wildlife and fisheries management and when differences between laws exist in the management of subsistence activities.

In other areas, the report finds that federal agencies should support the development of basic transportation infrastructure and subsidize local barge or air companies to ensure continued service to small communities.

The Denali Commission, a federal agency, is charged with increasing government effectiveness and coordinating state and federal efforts in the development of Alaska. Federal agencies that contributed to the report are the Denali Commission, the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, the U.S. Coast Guard, the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture Forest Service, USDA Rural Development, the U.S. Dept. of Commerce, NOAA, the U.S. Dept. of Health and Human services, Housing and Urban Development, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Bureau of Land Management, U.S. Fish & Wildlife, National Park Service, EPA Service Federal Highway Administration.

The Denali Commission pointed out that its own existence is up for reauthorization with the 2012 Farm Bill. The commission opened a comment period to include the state, private and tribal organizations to weigh in on their report. They want the public to identify the top five internal and interagency barriers to sustainable community development. The commission also seeks to identify specific "fixes" or solutions to those barriers, federal co-chair Joel Neimeyer wrote. The deadline for comment is September 17.

"Subsistence and cash economies often are in conflict," environments. Most national parks in Alaska are located near rural communities rather than urban areas. These parklands are often the homelands of these rural communities [...] Economic benefits that remain in the community can help support subsistence activities and help to further community sustainability," the 84-page report says.

In tune with the call for one lead agency, the Denali Commission suggests to develop consistency on how federal agencies implement their individual government-to-government consultations. This is in sync with many projects where sustainable communities and that federal agencies aren't making the best of partnerships, especially with tribal organizations. The agencies realized that they need to develop strong and lasting partnerships with Alaska Native non-profit associations, ANCSA corporations and native health corporations.

The report points out that solutions for the Lower 48 don't fit Alaska, its grand size and small population. The Corps of Engineers recognizes that the cost-benefit ratio – the careful calculation of costs to how many people benefit from a project such as water, sewer, or

Alaskans sound off on Arctic offshore drilling

By Dan Joling

ANCHORAGE, AP— Alaska's U.S. senators urged the Obama administration Thursday to get Arctic Ocean offshore petroleum development back on track.

The Alaskans who live closest to the proposed drilling rigs said federal regulators have not done enough to ensure the industry protects the environment and prepares for a catastrophic spill.

North Slope Borough Mayor Edward Itta of Barrow told Michael Bromwich, director of the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement, that drilling is stalled because the agency's predecessor, the Minerals Management Service, did little to alleviate concerns of the Inupiat Eskimo community.

"Someone needs to speak up in public and say why it is that progress in the Arctic offshore program is stalled," Itta said. "It's because in Alaska, your agency hasn't seriously listened to local communities. We need to change that."

Bromwich was in Alaska for a fact-finding forum before his recommendation to Interior Secretary Ken Salazar on whether to lift a moratorium on deep-water drilling. Bromwich told the audience, filled with industry representatives, Alaska legislators, environmental groups and other observers, that he was collecting opinions on drilling safety reforms, well containment and oil spill response.

U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski questioned why the moratorium was issued when the National Academy of Engineers, charged with determining what responses would be appropriate after the Gulf of Mexico blowout, did not recommend one.

"The administration knowingly destroyed 23,000 jobs in a time of nationwide economic instability for no apparent safety or environmental benefit," she said.

The primary leaseholder in the Alaska outer continental shelf, she said, was notified that its leases would be suspended from exploration as well, even though they were not in deep water.

"This killed what would have been a critical exploration season this summer and sidelined some 600 Alaskan jobs," she said. "To this day there has been no formal explanation as to why or how Alaska's activity was suspended in reaction to an accident thousands of miles away."

Democratic Sen. Mark Begich reminded Bromwich of the promise of recoverable reserves in the Beaufort and Chukchi seas — 24 billion barrels of oil and more than 100 trillion cubic feet of natural gas. Extraction is critical to the economic health of Alaska.

But Itta, representing a borough that covers 89,000 square miles at the top of Alaska, said he has opposed drilling because of the danger to whale migration and other subsistence resources.

Shell proposed exploratory drilling in 2006 and the borough's concerns were not addressed, he said.

"It appeared that MMS was in lockstep with the applicant," Itta said. Since then, Itta said, a federal court had vacated the agency's five-year drilling plan. Another court concluded the agency did not conduct a proper environmental analysis before a 2008 lease sale in the Chukchi Sea. A Government Accountability Office report faulted the Alaska office for its environmental reviews of drilling.

"MMS's attempts to help industry by downplaying subsistence and environmental concerns have had the opposite effect by creating the basis for valid court challenges," Itta said.

Caroline Cannon, president of the Native Village of Point Hope on Alaska's northwest coast, said little infrastructure, from ports to runways, exists to support cleanup of a catastrophic spill in the Chukchi.

"We rely on that ocean," she said.
"It's our garden."

Leslie Pearson, who spent 19 years responding to spills for the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation, said there was deep public shock and dismay when the Deepwater Horizon blowout occurred because the worst-case risks had been minimized. America is on a path to making the same mistake in the Chukchi and Beaufort seas, she said.

"It's time for the regulatory agencies to be regulators and evaluators, get out in the field and make industry prove up," she told Bromwich.

Dear Nome residents.

We are living in a small town where people know each other and it is very hard to hide good or bad news, or dodge rumors.

Also any bad or good news or rumors in our community spreads very fast and grows like a snowball.

Some rumors hurt people badly, some do not affect a specific person and just "flow" in the air.

I am a person who was hurt by recently created rumors and I want tell people what the real story is.

From Aug. 9-20 I was on a short vacation and when I returned to Nome, many people asked me if I was fired, resigned, under investigation or tried to leave town.

All this is not true, and I am very surprised as to why this rumor was created. Somebody was working hard to destroy my reputation.

I have worked for Alaska Gold since 1995 and am very proud to be the company representative in Nome and will stay as long as the company needs. This is not a very easy joba lot of responsibilities and diplomacy are sometimes required. I try and do as much as I can to make sure people and company officials are happy with what I am doing.

The company is a big part of my life; basically this is my life and there are no reasons for me to look for something different, especially at my age, unless the company asks me

I am working hard to make sure all Nova/Alaska Gold Co. customers are happy and the company has a strong reputation in the community.

Almost 20 years ago I made my first step onto this beautiful land and into this town, and I hope stay here after I retire. After I retire I want to spend more time working on some community projects, such as a mining museum, among other things

God bless our community! Nikolai I. Ivanoff Nome, Alaska

Hello out there.

Well, it's about fall time again.

Yea, school is getting under way. The kids get to go to school so they need to go to bed earlier now. So we should be able to have some free time to ourselves—oh boy! It's been to the point that I fell asleep before them, so now it should be reversed. Remind them that once they get through something, they pretty much don't have to think about it much anymore because they passed that part of the subject.

Man, too bad it wasn't AT&T who bought out the phone companies instead of GCI. At least maybe then we'd get a better service. GCI supposedly bought them out so the people who have ACS (and the other phone companies) should be able to use their phones wherever they are. So why can't they?

So, today I had an elder ask me to remind you that they would like to have moose meat too. Don't forget your elders when you catch or pick something. If it weren't for them some of us wouldn't be where we are today. They would/could only wish it was them going out there and getting it again. We are supposed to respect our elders and help them out. Heck, we are supposed to respect each other. People are supposed to matter the most. We are supposed to treat people gently—they can disappear before you can snap a finger! Treat each other with love. When they're gone—they're gone—no matter what.

We all mourn the loss of Senator Ted Stevens. I would like to thank the families of both Ted Stevens and Don Young. I and many, many people appreciate the sacrifice you, and your loved ones gave up so that we may have a better Alaska. Quyanabuk! We are very grateful.

OPINION

May God bless each of you and the start of the school year. Don't forget to encourage the kids to read. It is the best thing we could do for our kids. If they get stuck on anything—they can read on that subject and maybe figure it out, or ask someone about it.

Anyway, take care. Behave too. As always,

Norton Sound fishers begin to target halibut

By Jim Menard, Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game

A number of crabbers are gearing up to harvest halibut following last week's closure of the commercial red king crab fishery in Norton Sound. The halibut usually come into this area in early August. They prefer to be in 50 to 70 feet of water when passing through Norton Sound.

Subsistence fishermen have been catching halibut in recent weeks. The commercial and subsistence halibut fishery is administered by National Marine Fisheries Service. A subsistence halibut registration certificate is required from NMFS. The Alaska Dept. of Fish and Game mails out a subsistence halibut survey to SHARC holders, even though the permit is issued by NMFS.

To subsistence fish for halibut, one needs to be a rural resident residing within 10 miles of the ocean. Subsistence fishers must be in possession of the SHARC certificate when fishing. There is no hook limit, no catch limit, and no size limits for halibut, but you can't subsistence fish and sport fish for halibut in the same day. The sport limit is two halibut per day.

It's not unusual for people to subsistence fish for halibut in Norton Sound, but folks do need a better boat than is seen on some of the local rivers if they want to make it back to shore. In other words, the Dexter rafts won't cut it.

Red king crab catch

The commercial harvest of red king crab in Norton Sound's open access fishery totaled 387,310 pounds (preliminary figure). Together with a catch of 30,000 pounds of crab in the Community Development Quota fishery, the harvest totaled 417,310 pounds and exceeded the quota of 400,000 pounds by 4.3 percent. The estimated exploitation of the legal male biomass for Norton Sound was 9.5 percent. Thanks to the buyers, Norton Sound Seafood Products and Aquatech for their support of the fishery.

Salmon fishing winds down

We are now in the home stretch for this year's silver salmon run. The silver salmon counts picked up last week at the escapement counting projects in northern Norton Sound and tailed off at the escapement counting projects and test fishing project in southern Norton Sound. The Norton Sound commercial salmon harvest totaled 118 kings, 89 sockeyes, 31,826 pinks, 116,117 chums and 56,513 silvers on Aug.

Salmonella:

How to avoid this common cause of food poisoning

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Eggs came under the watchful eye of the Food and Drug Administration recently due to an outbreak of salmonella leading to a massive recall of potentially infected eggs.

The FDA investigation identified several farms in Iowa that allegedly distributed eggs contaminated with the bacteria Salmonella enteritidis. State officials tell us none of the potentially affected eggs made it to Alaska, and the chances of contracting the illness here in Alaska remains low. However, knowing something about salmonella can help prevent infection or ensure timely treatment if an infection is suspected.

Salmonella is one of the causes of food poisoning common in the United States. The bacteria lives in the intestines of infected animals and can be passed to other animals or humans through fecal contamination. Pet reptiles are notorious for being carriers of salmonella. Unwashed fruits, vegetables, and poultry may also be contaminated by exposure to animal waste during processing.

Salmonella is known to occasionally infect the ovaries of hens, which is likely the source of the current outbreak. Eggs laid by an infected hen can be contaminated with salmonella bacteria both outside and inside the shell.

According to the Center for Disease Control and Prevention, in the Northeast part of the United States about 1 in 10,000 eggs is internally infected with salmonella, but in other parts of the U.S., including Alaska, the rate is much lower.

Symptoms from an infection can develop from 8 to 48 hours after exposure to a contaminated food. Depending on a person's overall health, the symptoms may be mild with temporary abdominal cramping and loose stools, or more severe with fever, chills, diarrhea, nausea, severe abdominal cramping, and muscle aches. The illness can be deadly to the very young, elderly, or those whose immune system is compromised by illness or chemotherapy.

An infection is confirmed by growing the bacteria in culture, usually from a stool sample sent to the laboratory.

Antibiotics are rarely required to treat food poisoning with salmonella. In fact, antibiotics can induce what is called a "carrier state" where a person sheds the bacteria, potentially infecting others, for up to a year.

The most important part of treatment is hydration and replacement of electrolytes lost from diarrhea. Often, doctors will recommend a rehydration solution containing both sugar and salt to aid in efficient absorption of fluid. Intravenous fluids are sometimes required for patients who are unable to keep fluids down due to nausea.

Some people find the BRAT diet (bananas, rice, applesauce, and toast) helpful to reduce the symptoms of diarrhea.

In most people the symptoms resolve in 2-5 days with full resolution in 1-2 weeks.

The best way to avoid salmonella food poisoning is to wash all produce and poultry before cooking. Keep eggs cooled to less than 45°F and avoid using damaged eggs. Cook eggs until the white and yolk are firm. Anything made with eggs, like egg salad, should be refrigerated or consumed within two hours. Food handlers should wash their hands frequently to prevent spreading salmonella or similar bacteria.

ALL ALONE (above) - Rosa Schmidt stretches out her wide lead coming off the hill behind Nome-Beltz as she navigates the final mile or so of the race course Saturday. Schmidt won by more than a minute.

Nome runners dominate home course

By Tyler RhodesRunning as if she were being chased by a pack of competitors, freshman Rosa Schmidt likely had to rely on a bit of imagination as she blazed down the hill overlooking Nome-Beltz High School and the finish line.

While there certainly were competitors in the hunt, with about a mile left to run, Schmidt would not hear or see them until well after she finished the race. Posting a time of 25 minutes, 12 seconds, Schmidt claimed the win at the Nome Invitational cross country meet Saturday by more than a minute. Kotzebue's Darilyn Nelson took the runner-up honors with a time of 26:21.

On the boys' side, the Nanooks' first race as a full team came off with perfection. Led by Emerson Conger, who posted the fastest time of the day on the 5-kilometer course at 19:57, Nome wrapped up the first three spots as well as sixth and seventh places. Cross country is scored by adding up placing of each full team's top five runners with the lowest score winning. Since Nome and Kotzebue were the only schools delivering five or more runners to the starting line, team results were only based on Husky and Nanook runners. Through that prism, Nome scored first through fifth, for a total—and perfect—score of 15. Kotzebue scored 40.

Similarly, the girls' field was also only able to yield two scoring teams. Barrow was able to nudge Kotzebue for the win, scoring 26 to the Lady Huskies' 29. Point Hope only had four of its five runners finish the race, keeping it out of the scoring. Competing with volleyball for athletes, Nome's girls team is currently short one runner to qualify as a full team.

While the girls' finish was a solo affair, the boys' race appeared up for grabs right up to the end. Conger held the lead for much of the race, but brothers Sam and Tim Schmidt made sure he earned the win. Sam Schmidt crossed the line in second place just two seconds behind Conger, followed by Tim Schmidt five seconds later at 20:04. The trio of Nanooks had just enough time to catch their breath before White Mountain's Asa Bergamaschi claimed fourth place at 20:17. Sam George of Barrow finished at 20:34 before a barrage of Nome runners came across the line, consisting of Dion Williams, Tim Sullivan, Jeremiah Johnson and Nathan Blandford.

Following Rosa Schmidt, Nome's varsity girls place as follows: Caitlin Tozier, ninth; Beth Herzer, 11th; Hannah Tozier, 15th.

In the junior high boys race, Kotzebue's Parker Everett took first, followed by Nome's Emery Booshu. For the girls, Kotzebue dominated the first two spots, with Lynn Schaeffer winning, followed by Mary Garfield.

Kotzebue coach Lance Westing took the open race for the men while Nome assistant coach Erika Rhodes was the first woman to finish in the open competition.

Spikers split matches

Nome's volleyball team traveled to Kotzebue and faced Hooper Bay, Barrow and Kotzebue over the weekend.

The Lady Nanooks, under head coach Rob Luce this year, defeated Hooper Bay and lost to Barrow and Kotzebue.

Nome was able to take one game in its effort against Kotzebue. Nearly all the team's losses were by only three to four points.

The Lady Nanooks will next host Bethel Sept. 17-18.

Towarak to lead federal subsistence panel

By Tyler Rhodes

Tim Towarak, a man already holding many titles, can add one more to his list-Chairman of the Alaska Federal Subsistence Board.

Towarak, who is President of Bering Strait Native Corp. and co-Chair of the Alaska Federation of Natives, was appointed by U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Tom Vilsack and Interior Secretary Ken Salazar Aug. 31 to lead the federal board in Alaska. Towarak, who is an Alaska Native from Unalakleet, replaces former state Board of Game Chair Mike Fleagle.

Kotzebue man sentenced to 116 years in jail

By Tyler Rhodes

A man who was living in Kotzebue for the past few years will spend the rest of his life in prison after being sentenced to 116 years for multiple counts of sexual assault and furnishing alcohol to minors.

Superior Court Judge Michael Jeffery imposed the lengthy sentence to James Phillips, 54, in Kotzebue Sept. 2. Phillips was convicted on four counts of sexual assault, sexual assault of a minor and six counts of furnishing alcohol to a minor after a trial in April 2010. He was initially arraigned on the charges in March 2009. Under Alaska sentencing laws, which allow for a 99-year sentence if the guilty party has already been convicted of two or more felonies, Phillips is not eligible for parole. According to a press release from

Dear Editor,

This message goes out to my fellow Yupiks and Natives who speak, read and write and understand Yupik and Native language and lifestyle. I am merely encouraging those who are attending high school and are graduating to further their education.

There is a significant need for your assistance right now and tomorrow. We need Yupik and Native speaking and understanding advocates, doctors, nurses, receptionists, attorneys, social workers, assisted living homes, directors of some sort—we need you from all angles of the work force.

Please find your strength and use it to help each other. Too many times there are things said from a non-Yupik speaking individual to a Yupik cultured individual-if he/she does not ask but merely lets it slidemaybe it is something minute or crupeople may laugh—but a question is not dumb because there is an answer to every question. If an answer can be dissected into an understandable way, yes there is a way to translate it.

There is never a dumb question—

Please find your courage to further your education. In serving many villages during my workdays-I find villages that work closely together have lower crime rates, fewer social problems and more economic opportunities because all entities are focused on the same expectation. "What we do in the present affects the future." For our Native corporations and all Alaskans, this kind of place is no place for youngsters. "Education is the key!"

May almighty God blanket his Love to all Native corporations in

Get Involved

Editorial

Don't complain if the school board, utility board or city council seems to have run amok. Nomeites, it's time to get involved and become a candidate. The deadline to sign up is Friday, Sept. 10.

Local government is the grass roots of democracy. It is where we have a direct hand in influencing our schools, our city and our utilities. We can't let the mess that happened with our school board repeat itself. We need people who are not out to grind their cutlery. We need responsible people who are capable of good judgment and who are believers in open, transparent government. We need people who can devote time to listen and study the issues. We need folks who are willing to take training and learn the responsibilities of board/council members. We need people who consider public office an honor and realize the responsibilities entrusted to them by all of the people.

We can't afford to not care. We can't afford to let someone else do it. We can't sit back and let the majority of offices be uncontested. We can't go with appointed officials. Surely we have enough qualified people to give the citizens of Nome a choice. Nomeites, we have talents and skills, so just make the decision to go to City Hall and file for office. Don't be shy. Be a vital part of our American democracy. We are good people and we deserve good government. Don't wait for someone else to jump into the ring. They probably won't, so it is up to us to personally make a commitment. — N.L.M.—

State of Alaska in the news

Compiled by Diana Haecker

Murkowski concedes primary race, Alaska loses seniority in Senate

After absentee and questioned ballots were counted last week, incumbent U.S. Senator Lisa Murkowski could not close the gap and she conceded the primary race to the Tea Party Express and Sarah Palin-backed challenger Joe Miller. This unforeseen development put the relatively unknown Fairbanks lawyer into a national spotlight as well as Sitka Mayor Scott McAdams, the Democratic nominee. With Murkowski's defeat, seniority in the U.S. Senate is now a thing of the past. Miller runs as a fiscal conservative and had vowed to curb federal spending. This comes as Alaska heavily relies on federal dollars to pay for military installations and infrastructure. AP quotes University of Alaska Fairbanks political science professor Jerry McBeath saying that without Murkowski and with Begich still building tenure, Alaska has virtually no pull in the Senate.

Mayor Scott McAdams issued a statement saying that he agreed with Lisa Murkowski on the great majority of Alaskan issues and that she served Alaska as a state legislator and United States Senator with energy and enthusiasm. He said that Joe Miller ran an unfair, nasty campaign that didn't extend to Lisa Murkowski the respect she deserves.

Miller cited in three-car crash

AP— The Republican candidate who defeated U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski in Alaska's primary election has been cited for failing to exercise due care to avoid a recent three-car collision. Joe Miller was involved in the crash in his hometown of Fairbanks three days after the Aug. 24 election. Alaska State Troopers say Miller's vehicle rear-ended a vehicle driven by Denali Park resident James Raisis, who then rear-ended a car driven by Mark Lewis of Fairbanks. Lewis was cited for stopping on a highway. He plans to contest the citation and says he had been making a left turn and had his signal on when his sedan was struck. Troopers say no one was hurt.

Alaska Independence Party picks militia founder for Lt. Gov.

According to AP, the Alaskan Independence Party has selected Michigan Militia founder Norm Olson as its candidate for lieutenant governor. AIP leaders say they're sticking with the party's candidate for governor, Don Wright. Olson, who lives on the Kenai Peninsula, says he is commander of a growing group called the Alaska Citizens Militia. According to its website, the organization considers an act of war firearms restrictions, declaration of martial law and "mandatory medical anything."

Salazar conducts whirlwind tour of Alaska

Last week, U.S. Interior Secretary Ken Salazar was on a 48-hour visit to Alaska. He visited Anchorage and Barrow to discuss oil development and exploration. Following the blowout disaster that claimed the lives of 11 oil workers and an environmental oil disaster in the Gulf of Mexico, the Interior Department put Shell's exploration plans in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas on hold. Salazar said at a Friday news conference in Anchorage that the Gulf oil spill raised questions about the effectiveness of blowout preventers and spill response plans, according to KTUU. Salazar says he will not allow the drilling until he's confident it poses no threat. He says he's waiting for several Interior Department reports to be completed before making his decision.

State wants delisting of eastern stock of Steller sea lions

The State of Alaska petitioned the federal government last week to remove the eastern distinct population segment of Steller sea lions from the list of species protected by the Endangered Species Act. The state coordinated its filing with Oregon and Washington, which also filed a similar petition this week. The National Marine Fisheries Service divided Steller sea lions into two populations, the western and eastern. While the western population is listed as endangered, the eastern is listed as threatened, and the Parnell administration believes that the eastern sea lions have surpassed the recovery objectives set by NMFS. Parnell said that his administration is working on multiple fronts to ensure that commercial fishing and other important economic activities are not blocked by unwarranted ESA regulations. NMFS plans to limit federal groundfish fisheries, which pose threats to the recovery of the western Steller sea lions. Attorney General Dan Šullivan questioned NMFS scientific information and said that the curtailment of the commercial fisheries in the Western Aleutian Islands are unnecessarily drastic

NANA president appointed to redistricting board

Marie Kasannaaluk Greene, president and CEO of NANA Regional Corporation was appointed to the Alaska Redistricting Board. Chief Justice Walter Carpeneti appointed Greene to the five-member board responsible for reapportioning the state house and senate districts following the 2010 U.S. Census. vest for rural residents in Alaska on federal lands.

The appointment comes as the government just recently completed a review of its subsistence program. A Department of Interior press release tasks Towarak with leading the effort to—in the department's words—revitalize the program. "With his experience and understanding, [Towarak] is uniquely qualified to lead the Board in carrying out improvements that will strengthen its role in managing fish and wildlife on the public lands in Alaska," Secretary Salazar said in the release.

The release singles out a few proposed changes to the program yielded from the review process. One proposal would add rural Alaskans to the board which is currently made up of the appointed chair, the Alaska directors for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, National Park Service, Bureau of Indian Affairs, Bureau of Land Management and the Alaska Regional Forester for the U.S. Forest Service. Such a change would go through a public-comment process, according to the Department of Interior.

Another proposal would give more weight to the Regional Advisory Councils from throughout the state. Towarak and the board are also asked to take a greater role in the preparation of the budget as well as the hiring and the evaluation of the director of the Office of Subsistence Management.

the Kotzebue Police Department distributed by the Alaska State Troopers, Phillips was employed at a grocery store where he would befriend and invite young girls to his residence to drink and party. Once the girls—who ranged in age from 14 to 19—were intoxicated, Phillips would sexually assault them. Many of the girls were passed out and incapacitated, police said.

According to the police department, Phillips is a previously convicted sex offender who moved to Kotzebue three years ago from Oklahoma. He had been jailed for five sexual assaults on young women in Oklahoma and Arkansas. Phillips did not register as a sexual offender when he moved to Kotzebue to live with his brother.

Kotzebue Investigator Stephen Rabender commended the girls who came forward to testify, lauding their courage to tell their tale in public. "Most of the victims felt that since they were intoxicated, the opinion of the community would be that they deserved what happened to them. The case was investigated because law enforcement officers understand that being intoxicated does not in any way justify what happened to these victims," the release read.

Around the time Phillips was first appearing in court in Kotzebue for the sexual assault charges in 2009, a Nome woman was facing similar allegations in Nome. A trial for Sylvia Ivanoff, 44, is scheduled to begin Oct. 19 in Nome on several charges of sexual assault against a minor and furnishing alcohol to minors. Ivanoff was first arraigned in April 2009.

While Phillips failed to register as a sex offender, Alaskans can find out if a registered sex offender lives near them or their family. A searchable database of registered sex offenders in Alaska can be found on the state Department of Public Safety's web site at www.dps.state.ak.us. A link on the right side of the page, under the "Quick Links" title, directs users to the database. The database provides photos and the registered address for offenders who are current on their registration with the state.

Ex-vessel value of Norton Sound salmon harvest tops $1.1 million

Norton Sound salmon fishery ex-vessel value, 1972 - 2010

Norton Sound commercial salmon fishers received more than $1.1 million for their catch this season.

A great chum run and high prices paid for silvers are the driving factors in the ex-vessel value of the harvest. The average price for silvers this season has been $1.43 a pound, compared to 44 cents a pound in 2006. The average price for the season will likely go up a few cents with the addition of fish tickets from recent fishing periods in which the price has been $1.80 per pound at the dock in Unalakleet. Without adjusting for inflation, the ex-vessel value of this year's salmon catch tops that of 1983, the only other year in which the figure reached $1 million.

The region-wide commercial salmon harvest totaled 120 kings, 90 sockeyes, 31,826 pinks, 116,717 chums and 60,922 silvers for 113 permit holders on Sept. 4. The number of permit holders fishing this year was the highest since 1994 when 119 permit holders fished. Commercial salmon fishing closed Sept. 7 in Norton Sound.

sockeyes and 31,997 silvers for 58 permit holders as of Sept. 4. The chum catch is the best since 1992. The silver catch is below average compared to the recent 5-year average (2005-2009), when record runs took place, but is nearly double the previous 5-year average (2000-2004).

Southern Norton Sound always has a much bigger run of silvers than northern Norton Sound. For example, the Unalakleet subdistrict catch of 31,997 silvers is nearly half of the total 60,922 silvers caught region-wide as of Sept. 4.

Shaktoolik subdistrict

Commercial fishers harvested four kings, 39,822 chums, 5,365 pinks, 17 sockeyes and 11,811 silvers for 34 permit holders through Sept. 4 in the Shaktoolik subdistrict. The chum catch is the best since 1983. The silver catch is well below average compared to the recent five-year average (2005-2009), but is more than double the previous five-year average (2000-2004).

Norton Bay subdistrict

In the Norton Bay subdistrict, commercial catches totaled 5,915 chums, 2,597 pinks, seven sockeyes and 1,565 silvers for five permit holders as of Sept. 4. The chum catch is the best since 1988. The silver catch is about 10 percent behind last year's catch.

Elim subdistrict

Commercial catches totaled seven kings, 23,628 chums, 11,620 pinks, three sockeyes and 10,124 silvers for 19 permit holders through Sept. 4 in the Elim subdistrict. The chum catch is the best since 1985. The silver catch broke last year's record catch of 9,582 silvers.

Golovin subdistrict

In the Golovin subdistrict, commercial catches totaled two kings, 16,978 chums, 1,880 pinks, two sockeyes and 5,425 silvers for nine permit holders as of Sept. 4. The chum catch is the best since 1988, and the silver catch is a record. The sport fish bag and possession limit has been raised to six silvers a day in the Fish and Niukluk rivers, so the subsistence hook and line limit is also six silvers a day.

Nome subdistrict

In the first few days of September, more than 1,000 silvers passed the Nome River weir, and nearly 900 silvers passed the Snake River weir. A record 5,507 silvers were counted in the Sinuk River by aerial survey. The silver salmon subsistence catch limit is waived. Subsistence set gillnet fishing is open seven days a week in the marine waters and subsistence fresh water areas. Beach seining is not allowed.

Port Clarence district

Net fishing has reopened in the Kuzitrin and Pilgrim rivers. Beach seining is allowed, and all salmon species may be kept. Check your subsistence permit for catch limits. Salmon Lake will remain closed to salmon fishing to protect spawning sockeyes.

Kotzebue district

The commercial salmon fishery in the Kotzebue district closed Sept. 3. Preliminary catch figures for the season are 271,002 chum salmon by 68 permit holders. The catch was the highest since 1995, and the number of the permit holders fishing was the highest since 1997. The value of the harvest to permit holders was $817,000, the highest value without adjusting for inflation since 1988.

Red king crab fishery

Final catch figures for the Norton Sound commercial red king crab fishery totaled 417,304 pounds, including the open access and Community Development Quota harvests. Thirty-two permit holders used 23 vessels and made 286 landings during the 58-day season. Based on the estimated pre-season legal male red king crab biomass of 4.45 million pounds, the final harvest equated to an exploitation rate of 9.4 percent. The fishery ended on Aug. 24.

AGIA's Myers is new UAF research vice chancellor

Mark Myers, currently the State of Alaska Gasline Inducement Act coordinator was picked to serve as the campus' new vice chancellor for research. UAF Chancellor Brian Rogers said Myers is ideal for the position because of his experience as an executive, his strong connections to the state and federal governments, and his commitment to maintain UAF's place as a premier research institution. Myers will begin his new position Jan. 24, 2011. Myers also was the director of the U.S. Geological Survey. Myers holds bachelor's and master's degrees from the University of Wisconsin-Madison and a doctorate in geology from UAF. His career as a geologist and policymaker spans more than three decades and includes work as a geologist for ARCO Alaska and the State of Alaska. From 2001 to 2005, he served as director of the state Division of Oil and Gas. Prior to his geology career, Myers served in the Air National Guard and Air Force Reserve as a pilot and intelligence officer. As vice chancellor for research, Myers will oversee administration of UAF's $123-million-per-year research enterprise and supervise the university's standalone research institutes. Rogers selected Myers for the $214,000-a-year position from a slate of three finalists.

Overfishing charges against state senator dismissed

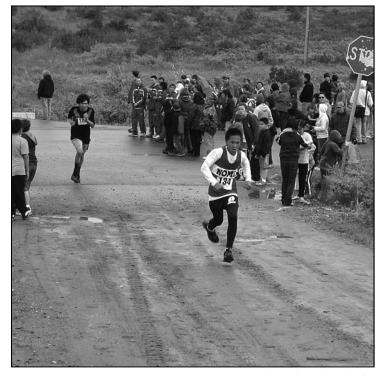

AP-A judge in Sitka has dismissed subsistence fishing violation charges against Alaska state Sen. Albert Kookesh and three others. Superior Court Judge David George ruled that the yearly family limit of 15 sockeye salmon under which the four were cited was adopted by the state Department of Fish and Game without public comment as required by state law. Native officials say because the limit was found unlawful, it is thus unenforceable. Kookesh is an Angoon Democrat and was charged with overfishing while beach seining along the shore of Kanalku Bay last year.

Cross country: Boys notch another perfect 15

Rosa Schmidt and Emerson Conger again take the tape and claim individual titles

Fifteen must be the Nanook boys cross country team's new favorite number.

Synonymous with perfection in the fall running sport, the score of 15 has been bestowed upon Nome's boys for two races in a row. The most recent sweep came in Kotzebue Sept. 3 as the Nanooks crowded the top of the field and put five scoring runners across the finish line before any other racer from a full team finished.

Emerson Conger again led the charge, pocketing his second win in a row with a time of 18 minutes, 39 seconds. Conger finished with a comfortable lead over a pair of strong runners from Kiana, Irving Morris and Brad Reich, who took second and third, respectively at 18:51 and 18:56. Since Kiana was not able to field a full team of five, Morris' and Reich's results were not factored into team competition.

Nome's second- through fifthplace runners came through the finish chute like a stampede, all crossing the line in an eight-second interval. Tim Schmidt (19:17), Jeremiah Johnson (19:20), Nathan Blandford (19:23) and Dion Williams (19:25) rounded out the

Nanooks' top five to net the perfect
The hometown Huskies were able eight and night place, respectively 15. Keeping the Nanook block in to edge out Point Hope by a score tact, 11m Sullivan was the next runner to cross the line at 19:40. Kotzebue's first scoring runner, Grant Magdanz, followed Sullivan in at 19:49. Nome's seventh varsity runner, Jens Irelan, cracked the top 15 in the field of 43 runners, finish-

Alaska Commercial is proud to announce our new Nome Store Manager, Mike McNally

A summer visit to Nome in 1997 was enough to convince Mike McNally to stay. He had just retired from the transportation industry and thought it was a good time to pursue his dream of potentially relocating to Alaska. Discussions with Alaska Commercial's Nome store led to a position in the information systems department, which then developed into the grocery manager position. After 12 years managing grocery, McNally is more than ready for his new role as store manager. He says he finds retail both challenging and stimulating and is rewarded by meeting the needs of Nome's residents. When he isn't in the Alaska Commercial store, he's hunting, fishing or enjoying the outdoors in the Seward Peninsula.

Diomede to Diomede, Diaz swims to goal

Shortly an hour after he plunged into the Bering Sea Aug. 27 from Russia's Big Diomede Island, long-distance swimmer Marcos Diaz touched the rocky shore of neighboring Little Diomede Island to complete his goal of symbolically connecting five continents.

Diaz, who hails from the Dominican Republic, reported fighting a strong northward current for half the swim in the 37°F water. The landing on Little Diomede's shore marked the final big crossing in his Swim Across the Continents Project—a series of four long swims to draw attention to the United Nation's Millennium Development Goals. The goals include ending poverty and hunger, universal education, gender equality, child health, combating HIV/AIDS, environmental sustainability and global partnership.

Diaz's swims were designed to link five continents across the globe. He started with an Oceania to Asia leg, connecting Papua, New Guinea to Indonesia. He then swam between Jordan and Egypt to connect Asia and Africa. For his third swim he crossed the Strait of Gibraltar, linking Africa and Europe. The Bering Sea endeavor was the final big push, linking Asia and North America.

Diaz will complete one more small swim on his project, a short jaunt (for him, at least) from the Statue of Liberty in New York City to Gantry Plaza State Park Sept. 15. His swim will end in front of the United Nations Headquarters where he will deliver signatures from his supporters to U.N. Secretary-General Ban Ki-Moon. The signatures are from those supporting Diaz in calling for the realization of the Millennium Development Goals.

More on Diaz, his swims and the United Nations Millennium Development Goals can be found at the following links:

SWIM, SWAM, SWUM—Marcos Diaz, a long-distance swimmer, recently completed a quest to link five continents by swimming. His last test took him to the Bering Sea.

From the principal's office: A great start to a year full of promise

By Steve Gast, Nome-Beltz High School Principal

As I reflect on my first month in my new home and the start of a new school year I am left with many impressions.

I am in awe of the beauty of this land and the tremendous respect people have for nature. I am impressed with the community and how warm and welcoming they have been. The pride that is so evident in the people of Nome is immediately apparent to an outsider such as myself. I am so very eager to learn of the Native culture and the rich history that surrounds this part of the world. It seems that too many in the Lower 48 have forgotten or never learned their own sets of skills and artistry that Alaskans treasure as their own unique birthright. Through the ivory and woodcarvings, to the handmade mukluks and kuspuks, and a thousand other marvels and legends the pride of this great state and people speak to each of us. I share a hope that the elders and protectors of a heritage so rich in tradition will continue to pass on to each successive generation these important lessons.

After only a few weeks with our students I see such joy in their faces and warmness in their hearts that every day and moment spent with them is a blessing. Our schools are filled with the future leaders of this great land and it is our responsibility to provide them not only with a great education, but also a warm and caring environment so they can truly enjoy their years at Nome-Beltz.

I want to share with the community that I have high expectations for our students in the areas of behavior and academics. I shared my expectations with them the first day of school and I share them now with you. I told them that I understood they wanted to be treated like adults and that I would do so. I also told them that with that treatment came responsibility on their part. I have faith in our students, and they know that I will do everything in my power to help them to be successful and reach their goals. Each student will be treated in a professional, caring and positive manner, but we will be firm in the application of our rules and always be fair and consistent when consequences are involved. I expect a high level of academic effort and for all students to behave in a manner appropriate for a high school environment. They know this and have responded in a very positive way. As a community you should be very proud of the students at Nome-Beltz. This is my 16th year as a high school principal and I have never had as smooth of a start to a school year or had students behave as well as this group. I am impressed but not surprised. What a great group of young people.

As a community we, the adults of Nome, have a challenging and rewarding job in guiding our children through their junior high and high school years. To help them to grow straight and true in these uncertain times that lie ahead will be a task that no single group can achieve alone. Only together as a team can we accomplish this. No one group can do it all. Not the parents, the community, or the school—it must be a joint effort. We at Nome-Beltz not only want your help but depend on it to help us improve and provide an educational environment second to none for our kids. Consider volunteering-give us a call and ask what you can do to help. There are so many ways that one can support our kids.

Come to our events; donate your time to help at an activity; or help run a concession stand. Get involved with your school.

We as educators have the unique pleasure to work with and enjoy the kids of Nome everyday, I wish all of the community could see what I see—great kids in a great school working hard to get ready for the next phase of life. The theme for our school this year is "ABOVE AND BEYOND" in the belief that when a team of dedicated individuals makes a commitment to act as one, the sky's the limit. My definition of a team is the entire community. I encourage you to give me a call because we are continually searching for ideas that will improve the educational programs here and enrich the school experience for our children.

I will conclude this the way I started. I am in awe of this place called Nome and thank you for the opportunity to serve you and the school. I urge you to get involved and to take advantage of the opportunity to work with and be a positive influence on our kids. Thank you, Nome for your warm welcome and your support. Because of our outstanding faculty and staff, and the amazing kids we have, I have no doubt this is going to be an outstanding year at Nome-Beltz.

Lois Ellen Christensen with her husband Corey married the love of her life, Cory Christensen on November 14, 1981. He brought a child to the relationship and she became "six pack, one to go", a moniker she would later use as her personal email address. Together they shared 29 years of struggles, companionship, friendship, parenthood, honor, and love. Cory promised her she would never have to work for a living and he would take care of her and her children for the rest of her life. Making good on his promise, Lois stayed a homemaker, loving mother and grandmother throughout their years together. Cory said Lois was also the best pickpocket he ever knew, saying if he had ten cents, she would find a hundred dollar bill. If you ever bought a raffle ticket from her, you know what he is talking about.

Lois and Cory started their life together in Sandy, Utah. Times were hard and Cory recalls having to steal carrots so they would have something to eat. They moved on to Montana where they spent eight years. In 1989, Cory's friends at the local bars paid for him and other friends to get out of town, telling him he better not come home broke. Cory made his way to Alaska and traveled around the state until he found permanent work in Seward. He moved Lois and the family there in 1991. Lois' fondest memories she would share were of Seward and her friends there who became her fam-

She started her life of service with the American Legion Auxiliary Post #5 in Seward and became a lifetime member. Her local sisters in the American Legion Auxiliary would try to get her to join the Nome Post # 19 but she would not waiver on her loyalty to Post #5.

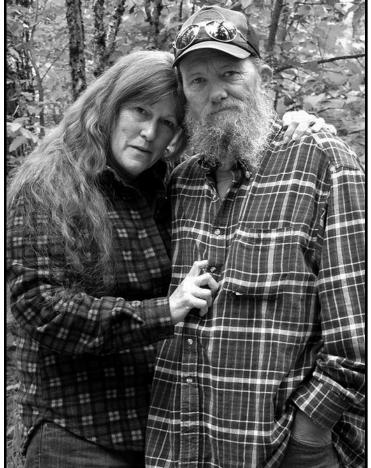

Cory came to Nome in 1999 and moved Lois here in 2000. They packed a 40 ft. connex van full of their goods and had it shipped here never to be opened again.

Cory said if you have seen the show "Hoarding, Buried Alive" that this was his life with Lois. As they moved to bigger and bigger homes, Lois was sure to fill each storage space and room with her treasures. Remembering some of their tough times, Lois found a use for everything and saved it.

Lois is survived by her husband Cory, her children Steven, Kevin, Michael, Andy, Luis, Roger and Cory's son Chris, her brother Mike and sister Linda, her grandchildren Dustin, Bryce, Brock, Kevin, and Aric. She was preceded in death by her parents Howard and Betty and her sister Judy.

Before Lois died, she sincerely wanted to thank the community of Nome for supporting her and her family during her battle. She was so grateful to be able to travel to Montana, Anchorage and Seward to see all of her children and grandchildren and make a few lasting memories for them. Fortunately, she spent her last birthday with her beloved friends and family in Seward at Post #5. Lois did not enjoy sharing her birthday with Independence Day - she kept the fact a secret. Funny, since she was one of the most loyal Americans you could ever meet.

Lois will be sincerely missed by all those whose lives she touched during her time with us.

Clements "Nick" Lean

Clements Nicholas Lean was born on September 24, 1921 in Seward, Alaska, to Charlie and Beryl Lean of Coopers Landing. The Leans ran a roadhouse at The Landing, catering to sportsmen and travelers. Nick, as their son was known, was not aware of his name as it appeared on the birth certificate until he was learning to write in first grade. Nick passed away on September 4, 2010 at the Fairbanks Pioneer Home still answering to the name of earliest memory.

Charlie and Bervl fostered Bervl's sister's three young daughters, Alex, Billy, and Imogene Carlson, before Nick began school, immediately doubling the family and the community's child population. Thus Riddiford School was established in a log cabin his father built on their property and was where Nick and his cousins attended school for the next 10 years. As a child in a fading mining town during the depression, Nick grew up fast and was pulling his weight at an early age. He cared for the dogs in his uncle's mail team in the summers and had many an early hunting and mining experience. This included surviving a bear mauling at 17 and an encounter as a very shy country boy shortly thereafter with the Seward madam who offered a social encounter with her staff during his first few days out the hospital.

Nick took a year after high school to work at Bill Knack's Stetson Creek gold mine to put up a grubstake to go to the Fairbanks School of Mines. He entered the school in the fall of 1939. Summers were spent working for the Fairbanks Exploration (FE) Company. He managed to find enough work to stay in school until he was drafted in early 1942 during the second semester of his junior year.

His engineering classes allowed him to capture the highest Alaska score on the Army aptitude test. He was immediately promoted to clerk and weatherman. His Alaska service was at Ladd Field and in Nome. He would later relate amusing stories about the Russian Lend Lease Pilots he came into contact with. Eventually he was stationed in Delaware and Illinois where he trained weather observers for the Army Air Corps.

After the war Nick returned to the School of Mines and graduated two years later with two degrees, majoring in mining engineering and geology. During the next 10 years, he taught extension courses in mining and prospecting and worked at doing the same. He spent three summers with the Anaktok Syndicate prospecting the Salmon River (now in Kobuk Valley National Park) and Klery Creek near Kiana using churn drills and caissons. The heavy items were freighted in with local dogs in teams as large as 110 dogs. While teaching classes on prospecting methods in Seward during the winter of 1951 Nick met Nancy, his future wife.

Nick found two summers of mining employment with the Livengood gold dredge firm of Callahan Zinc-Lead Company. Nick and Nancy spent one winter in Globe, Ariz., where he did underground engineering for the Globe-Miami Copper Mine. It was a job in Nome that finally offered the most stability. He worked at USSR&M for the next five years as the mine engineer and ditch foreman. His sons, Charles and David, were born during this period. The price of gold being fixed at $35/ounce provided incentive to change careers, and in 1958 Nick went to work as a road engineer for the BPR, the U.S. Bureau of Public Roads. His old prospecting and wilderness skills were put into play again when he was dropped off at the Kougarok mine and walked the 55 miles back to Banner Creek near Nome three times to place the preliminary line for the new Nome-Taylor Highway (the Kougarok Road today). It was during this time that his daughter Rebecca was born, always a source of pride for Nick. In his later years, he took pleasure in knowing the Kougarok Road and often commented on minor changes to line and maintenance of the road.

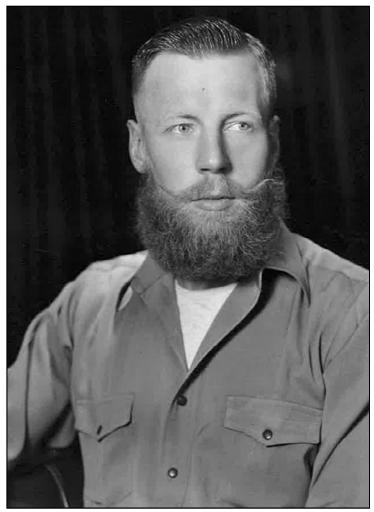

Nick said that Nome was the friendliest place he had ever lived. Nevertheless, he chose to follow a career as a civil engineer (PE). He moved the family back to Fairbanks and eventually to Douglas. He changed agencies from the Alaska Department of Transportation to the Bureau of Indian Affairs, where he ran the Alaska roads office. He built more roads in the state, in more locations, than virtually anyone. Nick had acquaintances and friends from Metlakatla to Barrow, and from Chandalar to Chignik.

While living in Douglas, Nancy passed away unexpectedly in 1969, leaving Nick with his three children and a construction career that demanded summer travel. He managed to cope well with this tragedy with the help of both sets of his children's grandparents. Nick was a good father and a generous community volunteer. He helped the Boy Scouts for 10 years and served the Douglas Lions Club as secretary for many years.

After retiring from the Bureau of Indian Affairs, Nick finished his career with a stint at the City of Juneau. He then spent the next 20 summers living, hiking and gardening at his parents' old Coopers Landing house which was virtually unchanged from the 1920s. He reigned as the old man of The Landing, and actually had tour coaches stop to hear his stories. The people of The Landing took great care of him in his final years, and he longed to return for one more berry season. But do not ask where the patches are if you want to keep it friendly!

Nick is survived by his children, Charles, David, and Rebecca Kugele; his four grandchildren; and by cousin Alex White. There will not be a local service. Interment will be at Coopers Landing.

For 34 Labor Days in a row, Leo Rasmussen has gotten away with trying to douse everyone he can see along Nome's Front Street.

Rasmussen got a little help from Mother Nature this year as a headwind drove the intermittent rain into the faces of spectators and the racers in this year's Great Bathtub Race.

Billed as the world's oldest continuous bathtub race, the event happens at high noon every Labor Day on Front Street.

Just about as continuos as the event itself is the reign of the Crowley team. Once again, the bicycle-wheeled tub from Crowley left the two other tubs in the mud—which would have been dust if it were drier weather.

KICY Radio's team gave a noble effort as the runners-up, pulling a barebones outfit on small wheels. Rasmussen's team, named Leo's Red Bare'n, took third—and last—place, a spot the Red Bare'ns have occupied before. Rasmussen didn't seem too concerned about his team's position in the race; the longer it took his team to pull him down Front Street, the more time he had to fire his squirt gun at the crowd.

The race requires five crew members to push and pull the tub, and a captain who rides inside. Racers need to finish wet while wearing suspenders and brimmed hats. The tub needs to have water and bubbles in it as it is pulled down the street.

2010 Great Bathtub Race:

1) Crowley Maritime: Captain - Walter Bell; Towel Guard - David Stickel; Bath Mat Guard - Jacob Bloodgood; Soap Guard - Dean Hildreth; Wash Cloth Guard - Christian Leckband.

2) KICY Radio: Captain Ryan Letares; Towel Guard - Tom Mute; Bath Mat Guard - Jesse Mute; Soap Guard John Wayman; Wash Cloth Guard - Erin Forton; Assistant -Ryan Mute.

3) Leo's Red Bare'n: Captain Leo Rasmussen; Towel Guard - Leslie Davis; Bath Mat Guard - Ben Copp; Soap Guard - Tibo Thellier; Wash Cloth Guard - Matthew F. Smith.

WE THANK YOU!

Thank you!

We thank the following that made Lois "Nome Raffle Lady" Christensen's battle with cancer a little easier and her final dreams come true.

We apologize to anyone we did not mention. We would like to thank the whole community on behalf of the Nome Raffle Lady to all that donated and helped with her fundraiser in June 2010.

Please God, forgive a silent tear, A constant wish that he was here, Others were taken, yes, we know, But he was ours and we loved him so. He bid no one a last farewell, Nor even say goodbye. He was gone before we knew it, And only God knows why. If all the world were ours to give, We'd give it all and more, To see that loving face of his, Just once more. For those who have someone who means a lot, Treasure them with care. For you never know their value, Til you see their vacant chair.

Carpal tunnel syndrome:

It's all in the wrist

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Carpal tunnel syndrome is a common cause of wrist pain and hand numbness. It is caused by damage to a large nerve, called the median nerve, that passes through a tight tunnel in the wrist formed on the top by a strong band-like ligament stretching across the palm side of the wrist and on the bottom by the eight carpal bones surrounding the back side of the wrist.

The location of the carpal tunnel is easy to identify making a fist and slightly flexing the wrist. On the palm side of the wrist you will notice several creases crossing from the thumb-side to the pinky-side. Two of these creases will be more prominent. You may also notice several tendons running lengthwise down the forearm stand out as they near the wrist. Just underneath these tendons is the large median nerve running in the same direction through the carpal tunnel.

Anything that puts pressure on the median nerve at this location in the wrist will eventually cause the classic symptoms of carpal tunnel syndrome. Other common causes include activities that require gripping or repetitive wrist twisting, extended periods of typing, and sleeping with the wrists flexed.

People with diabetes, rheumatoid arthritis, obesity, kidney disease, or thyroid problems have an increased risk for carpal tunnel syndrome because these conditions cause swelling of the tissues within the tunnel. Symptoms may also flare temporarily in women who are pregnant or in women taking oral hormones for contraception or menopausal symptoms.

Sometimes it is hard to tell the difference between carpal tunnel syndrome and other causes of wrist pain like arthritis, tendonitis, trigger finger, or a pinched nerve in the neck. True symptoms of carpal tunnel include: numbness in the thumb, pointer finger, and ring finger; weakness in the thumb; pain in the wrist sometimes radiating up the forearm; or trouble gripping objects. Your doctor can perform a brief physical exam to help distinguish between the various causes of wrist pain.

Over time, without treatment, injury to the median nerve as it passes through the carpal tunnel leads to irreversible damage to the muscles of the thumb and first two fingers. This damage makes it increasingly difficult to grip objects or manipulate

Once symptoms have been present for several weeks, doctors may order special nerve conduction studies to determine the extent of injury to the median nerve and rule out other problems.

Often surgery is necessary to release the tight ligament over the carpal tunnel in order to take pressure off the median nerve. However, before surgery is required, there are four primary ways to treat, and possibly eradicate, the symptoms conservatively:

First, a wrist splint should be worn to prevent excessive flexion or extension of the wrist during sleep or activity requiring repetitive wrist motion. These splints may be purchased over-the-counter, online, or from a local medical supply source.

Second, ibuprofen or naproxen sodium should be used to reduce inflammation and ease pain of the wrist and fingers. Similarly, an ice bath or cold pack applied to the wrist for 15 minutes at a time will serve the same purpose.

Third, ultrasound therapy as part of physical therapy, repeated over several weeks, has been shown to relieve symptoms in select patients.

Finally, if conservative therapy fails to reduce symptoms, doctors may recommend a corticosteroid injection directly into the carpal tunnel. This procedure is often performed in the office. When combined with splinting, a steroid injection has been found to provide better relief than river, pushed by a strong south wind. With waves, believe it or not, carrying water upriver, the tiny Rotary Club ducks had a tough time doing what should come naturally—floating down river to the Snake River Bridge where a modest crowd stood in the rain to see which duck would get there first. Whoever bought a Labor Day Great Snake River Duck Race ticket that matched the number on the duck would win $1,500.

Finally, one brave, green duckie, floating on its side, way ahead of the pack, scooted under the bridge all alone.

Jack Tisdale, visiting from New Underwood, S.D., last month, bought five tickets from a Nome Rotarian in the annual fundraiser for Rotary scholarships. While she separated him from his 20-dollar bill, the ticket peddler told him that his sister Shirley Tisdale's duck had come in second and won her $750 in 2009.

He laughed. That was news to him, he said. Monday he laughed again, but louder, and last, when his first-place green duck, number 0195, came up with two times as much money—$1,500.

"You got to be kidding. You've GOT to be kidding," Tisdale roared over the phone from New Underwood.

AK-1860- AC

Cold Rotarians in a motorboat followed the ducks for two hours before they started to pay off. Brittney Bell's duck won second, paying her $750.

Bell had a system, and it worked, she said. She didn't fill out five tickets in a row. She filled out every other ticket in a book of tickets.

Bell, who works at Airport Pizza, had plans for the money. "I'll pay some bills, but I'll save most of it. I'm saving all my tips for a year, too," she said. Why? "I'll be 21 on May 28. Some other friends who will be 21 and I are planning a trip to Las Vegas."

Marie Lugdon's duck won third place for $500. Then the Rotarians dip a Wild Duck, any old duck, regardless of order. Greg Bonham had the Wild Duck for $250.

The annual Labor Day Great Snake River Duck Race followed a month's ticket sales drive to help Nome Rotary Club replenish its scholarship fund. In May, the club awarded two four-year scholarships of $500 per year and two one-time $500 scholarships to Nome students.

Rotary members motored over the river through the rain between Bering Air and the bridge, catching up the remaining ducks with fishnets. The ducks will be counted, numbered and ready to go for the Labor Day Great Snake River Duck Race next fall. It's a safe bet the Tisdales will be good for more tickets.

ROUGH LANDING—Sen. Donny Olson's Cessna 310 is seen resting on the tundra near the top of King Mountain Sept. 17. Olson was able to walk away from the wreckage after putting the plane down on the tundra Sept. 15.

Sen. Olson uninjured in plane crash

By Tyler Rhodes

Sen. Donny Olson was able to walk away from a plane crash Sept. 15 near the top of King Mountain a few miles north of Nome.

Olson was the pilot and only occupant in his Cessna 310 at the time of the incident. A press release from the Alaska Senate Bipartisan Working Group released the same day described the incident as "a controlled landing on the tundra north of Nome in bad weather." The release said Olson was uninjured in the incident and was medically cleared by a doctor. The brief release noted that it would be Olson's only public statement regarding the matter.

Larry Lewis, an air safety investigator with the Alaska Region of the National Transportation Safety Board, said he was still compiling information on the incident before he could report any findings. "It takes a few weeks to get it all together and draw some sort of conclusion," Lewis said Sept. 21.

Lewis said Sept. 21.

Lewis was able to say that Olson had been in radio contract with approach control as he was attempting

56ers blur lines between grades

By Tyler Rhodes

With just 30 minutes of school left before the start of the weekend last Friday, nearly all the fifth and sixth graders at Nome Elementary School were busy doing anything but staring at the clock.

In one room, students darted about the classroom putting the final touches on their scale models of King Island. Next door was a bit calmer as young painters worked on water color landscapes while visiting artist Bill Brody circled the room checking out their progress. On the other side of the pod of classrooms, a chorus of voices chimed away while teacher Ian McRae led the song "Waltzing Matilda" on his guitar. As the time neared to go home, teacher Kelly Thrun and a group of students returned to the pod after a field trip to the Norton Sound Seafood Products plant.

The flurry of activity in the corner of the building felt like a departure from the normal school day. But Fridays—and the entire school year, for that matter—in the fifth/sixth grade pod are designed to be different.

Prior to this year, just like in the grades leading up to their final years

Dear Editor:

Just the other day I was perusing the fine vegetables at Hansen's Grocery when I looked up and saw one of the more Christian ladies of goodold Nome approaching up the aisle with her grocery cart. I was about to extend my warm greetings when out of nowhere one of these half-pant jwearing teenbots strode between on a mission of self-embarrassment unequaled on the face of the human earth. Why, when Miss Nitinbocker's eyeballs caught sight of this disgusting slipshoddiness, I could tell by the look on her face that she considered this young man to be a completely pure form of useless varmint.

Many kids and young adults, who for lack of self-esteem, common sense, and good parenting, copy each other without the slightest questioning of why they do what they do.

The practice of wearing your pants three-quarters of the way down your bottom comes from the prison system. I got this information right from Billy Bob's condensed but corrected version of Prison Etiquette 101. It states (When you become the sexual property of a male prisoner you must wear your pants 3/4 of the way down your bottom. This lets other male prisoners know that you are owned by another man.)

So. All you young whippersnappers...you are really showing off your brainpower now. For the parents of these young folks, since when is it OK to let your children go out half-dressed in clothes that make it impossible to move quickly if need be? Why don't you as parents do us all a favor and start at the bottom. From what I can see you can only go

I would like to correct information from Tyler Rhodes' article, "NSEDC spurs entrepreneurs with $105,00 in seed money," from last week's Nugget. While Mr. Rhodes correctly identified Inniaguktuna, meaning "I want to visit," as an Inupiaq word, he was mistaken to claim that it also means, "let's talk." The subtitle for my new publication is "Let's Visit." Thank you.

Consistency

What's good for the goose is good for the gander. If a law is to be enforced, it must be enforced equally across the board— no favoritism or special deals. In Nome we have to maintain a sense of humor, but sometimes the outcome is not very funny. If we stop to think too hard, it may do brain damage.

It's nice to see the speed control trailer on the south side of Seppala. It shows how fast we're going as we approach town. The flashing speed numbers are above a big sign stating a 25 mph speed limit. On the north side of the street, just across from the 25 mph sign, the posted speed limit is 30 mph. If folks are in a hurry to get to the airport they may have noticed the "speed zone ahead" sign as they bear to the north at the airport loop. Don't waste time looking for the speed zone - it isn't to be found. We have "no parking" signs near the port on the west side across from Larry's Auto. Apparently customers park their vehicles there and the City fears these cars and trucks could leak oil onto the port parking area. The big trucks parked on the east side of the port apparently are not a concern. Parking is a problem, but not for City Hall. Folks visiting and working at City Hall have been parking City and private vehicles on the vacant private lot across from City Hall for several years. Don't try to figure why it is OK for the City to use private land for parking near City Hall, but not OK for residents to park along city streets by the port. (See photos pages 2 and 9.)

These situations are petty, for sure, but if a law is to be enforced, it must be enforced equally for everyone, and that includes the City itself. - N.L.M.-

State of Alaska in the news

Compiled by Diana Haecker Murkowski launches writein campaign

Defeated by Tea Party Express-endorsed Republican Joe Miller in the GOP primary, U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski announced after a week of suspense that she decided to launch a write-in campaign. She made the announcement last Friday at the Dena'iana Center in downtown Anchorage. Throughout the weekend, Miller and Murkowski were attacking each other on national television. Murkowski said on CNN's show "State of the Union" that Miller is an extremist when it comes to budget cutting. She said he is suggesting radical things like dumping Social Security, Medicare and cutting down the Department of Education. Miller fired back during a news show on Fox and accused Murkowski of being out of touch with Alaskan voters. Miller argues that states rather than the federal government should handle assistance programs that are not directly listed in the constitution. As Alaska's Republicans and Republican congressional leaders embraced the new Alaskan nominee Joe Miller, Murkowski told the AP that she feels as if Republican leaders have turned their backs on her as she mounts a write-in bid to try to hold onto her seat.

Democratic nominee McAdams of Sitka said that his campaign is not going to focus on the opponent, but to campaign on issues like job creation, education and how to keep Alaska's share of federal investments.

Write-in campaigns are only seldom successful. In Alaska, nobody ever come out on top running a write-in. However, there is precedent of trying to do so. In 1968 Democratic Senator Ernest Gruening's was defeated in the primaries by Mike Gavel and then set out to run as an independent write-in candidate. Gruening gathered 17 percent of the vote, placing him third in the senatorial race.

Inspired by Murkowski's decision, Republican Bill Walker is considering joining the gubernatorial race as a write-in. His campaign manager, Taylor Bickford, told The Associated Press the landscape has changed significantly with Friday's announcement by U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski that she would run as a write-in in an effort to keep her job. AP reports that Bickford says Walker has received an outpouring of support and is seriously considering reentering the gubernatorial race. Walker finished second to Gov. Sean Parnell in last month's GOP primary. Walker focused on his plan to build an "all Alaska" line, arguing it provided the best alternative to getting a line built and providing a market for Alaska gas.

Fish and Game commissioner Lloyd announces sudden retirement

Alaska Department of Fish and Game Commissioner Denby Lloyd told Fish Radio in Kodiak that he plans to retire on December 1. Lloyd was arrested in downtown Juneau last month and charged with driving under the influence of alcohol and reckless endangerment. His departure as head of the state's Dept. of Fish and Game will come just before he is scheduled to appear in court on Dec. 6. The governor's spokeswoman confirmed that Lloyd is going to retire but didn't link it to the ongoing court case against him.

NEA-Alaska endorses Berkowitz for Governor

Democratic nominee in the gubernatorial race Ethan Berkowitz scored a significant endorsement as the Alaska chapter of the National Education Association decided to support his candidacy. NEA's president Barb Angaiak said that this is the group's first gubernatorial endorsement since 1998. During an appearance in front of the union's interview committee, Berkowitz voiced support of early childhood education and benefits programs for public employees. According to Angaiak, Republican candidate and incumbent Sean Parnell was invited, but could attend the NEA interview.

Summer 2010 third lowest sea ice extent

While sea ice is slowly growing back for the winter season, the National Snow and Ice Data Center reports that on Sept. 10, the sea ice extent seemed to have been at its annual low point and dropped to roughly 1.8 million square miles.

The 2010 minimum ice extent is the third lowest recorded since 1979. The record low was in 2007: the second record low year was 2008. The data center's numbers show that 2010 marked only the third time in the satellite record that ice extent has fallen below 1.93 million square miles and that all those occurrences have been within the past four years. The minimum for 2009 was 1.97 million square miles, the fourth lowest in the satellite record.

Although the melting season started late, the ice extent declined rapidly with record daily ice loss rates for the Arctic as a whole for May and June. Assuming that we have indeed reached the seasonal minimum extent, 2010 would have the shortest melt season in the satellite record, spanning 163 days between the seasonal maximum and minimum ice extents

At the 2010 seasonal minimum, ice remained fairly extensive in the East Siberian Sea, compared to 2007. when this area was ice-free. 2010 ended up having less ice than 2007 in the Beaufort Sea and in the East Greenland Sea. Both the Northwest Passage and Northern Sea Route were open at the 2010 sea ice minimum, whereas in 2007, ice blocked part of the Northern Sea Route.

Marine Fisheries Commission to help commercial fishermen to compensate for their losses due to the Yukon River Chinook salmon fishery disaster over the last two years. The commission is supposed to distribute the money and new nets to commercial fishermen affected. In 2008, the commercial salmon harvest was 89 percent below the five-year average, and the fishery remained closed through 2009. Secretary of Commerce Gary Locke declared a Yukon Chinook salmon fishery failure last January.

Mountain and ice field to be named after Stevens

U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski introduced legislation to honor the late Senator Ted Stevens by naming a mountain and part of an ice field after him. The proposed Stevens Peak, known as South Hunter Peak, is located in Denali National Park. At 13.895 feet, the mountain is the tallest unnamed peak in Alaska. Murkowski has also proposed naming the northern half of the Chugach ice field after Stevens - the southern and western portions of the field already being named for Harding and Sargent. The legislation requires the U.S. Geological Place Names Board to christen the peak and ice field within 30 days of its passage. Stevens died in a plane crash near Dillingham on Aug. 9 and has served 39 years in the U.S. Senate representing Alaska.

NANA invests in the film industry

Just as Alaska is setting the stage for the feature motion picture Everybody Loves Whales that is being filmed in the state, NANA Development Corp. wants a slice of the action and signed a partnership agreewith Anchorage-based Evergreen Films. Helvi Sandvik, president of NANA Development Corp. said that she is excited about being involved on the front end of the development of a new industry in Alaska. The Alaska Legislature has created a film production incentive program to lure film productions to Evergreen Films CEO Mike Devlin said that British Columbia has a film and TV industry worth $1.2 billion and supports about 20,000 jobs. Devlin's goal is that Alaska surpasses these numbers in ten years. Evergreen Films is an independent film production studio headquartered in Anchorage with a complete 3D production and post-production studio. It also has a production facility in Los Angeles.

Evergreen also is in partnership with BBC Earth to produce a 3D dinosaur feature film and has a deal with Alaska mystery writer Dana Stabenow to produce a television series based on Kate Shugak, a character from Stabenow's novels. The series is currently in development to be produced in Alaska for a global television audience.

Small business legislation passed Senate

The U.S. Senate has passed a bill Democrats say will benefit small businesses. It cleared the Senate last Thursday on a vote of 61 to 38, with Democrats and two retiring Republicans supporting it. U.S. Senator Mark Begich, D-Alaska, voted "yes," his colleague Sen. Lisa Murkowski, R-Alaska, voted "no". The House must still pass the bill before it becomes law, but it's expected to do so easily next week. The aid package includes $12 billion in tax relief for small businesses, and $30 billion in loans that would go to community banks to give new loans to small businesses.

Alaska gets money adopted foster children

The U.S. Department of Health and Human Services paid out $719,213 to Alaska to help increase the number of children adopted from foster care. According to DHHS, states receive $4,000 for every child adopted beyond their best year's total, plus a payment of $8,000 for every child age 9 and older, and $4,000 for every special needs child adopted above the respective baselines. The year 2007 is the baseline for Alaska. Once a state receives adoption incentive dollars, it is free to use the money on anything related to adoptions. This is the third year in a row that Alaska has received these adoption incentive funds. The state's Office of Children's Services received $224,000 in 2009, and $194,000 in 2008.

ACEP funded for winddiesel energy research

The Alaska Center for Energy and Power at the University of Alaska Fairbanks has received a $3 million grant from the Department of Energy to optimize wind-diesel hybrid energy systems in rural Alaska. Alaska is already home to several systems pairing wind turbines with diesel power plants like Kotzebue and Nome. However, many are not performing as designed due to Alaska's extreme weather and remote, distributed grid systems. The money is to be used to resolve technical issues, long-term energy storage and better control systems to deal with the fluctuation of wind power. ACEP is leading a team of researchers from both UAF and UAA, including engineers, economists, natural resource scientists and experts on the social issues of rural Alaska. The project will include partnerships with the Alaska Energy Authority, the Denali Commission, the Renewable Alaska Energy Project and national laboratories. The grant is part of the DOE's experimental program to stimulate competitive research.

Norway and Russia agree on new offshore boundary

MOSCOW (AP) - Russia and Norway signed an agreement last week on their maritime border in the energy-rich Barents Sea, ending a dispute that has dragged on for decades. Russian President Dmitry Medvedev and Norwegian Prime Minister Jens Stoltenberg said after the signing that the deal would strengthen stability in the region and enhance economic cooperation between the two neighbors. "We have been trying to reach this agreement for 40 years," Medvedev said after his talks with Stoltenberg in Russia's Arctic port of Murmansk.

Stoltenberg praised the deal as sending a signal to the world about the region. NATO member Norway and Russia failed to agree on a maritime border in the Barents Sea during the Cold War and difficult talks dragged on following the 1991 collapse of the Soviet Union.

Interest in the Arctic region has intensified amid evidence that global warming is shrinking the sea ice, opening up new shipping lanes and opportunities to explore rich oil and gas deposits. Russia claims a large part of the Arctic seabed as its own, arguing it's an extension of the country's continental shelf. In 2007, scientists staked a symbolic claim by dropping a canister containing the Russian flag onto the seabed from a small submarine.

The United States, Canada, Denmark and Norway have also been trying to assert jurisdiction over parts of the Arctic, which is believed to contain as much as a quarter of the Earth's undiscovered oil and gas. Medvedev said Russia is wary of NATO's presence in the Arctic region. "Russia is watching such activities with serious concern," he said. "It's a zone of peaceful economic cooperation, and a military factor would raise additional problems.'

2010 PFD is $1,281

By Tyler Rhodes

Nearly 641,600 Alaskans will be see an extra $1,281 headed their way in the coming weeks.

Gov. Sean Parnell announced the 2010 Permanent Fund Dividend amount at a Sept. 21 press conference. The first dividends will be paid out by direct deposit on Oct. 7. More than 530,000 applicants will see the deposit arrive directly in their bank accounts. Approximately 85,000 Alaskans will be mailed a check. After the initial Oct. 7 distribution, the next round of direct deposits and direct mailings will occur beginning Oct. 28.

The dividend nearly matches last year's amount of $1,305 that was given to every eligible man, woman and child in the state. The 2008 dividend topped the $2,000 mark at $2,069 and was made even fatter with an additional $1,200 payment labeled as a "resource rebate."

The total distribution made to Alaskans through the PFD this year will top $821 million. Alaskans who have received each PFD will have now been paid $32,194.59 over 29 years. That figure does not include the $1,200 resource rebate of 2008. Overall, the state has paid out a total of about $18.2 billion through the 29-year PFD program and the one-time resource rebate.

Unlocked cars are taken for joy ride

In the early morning hours of Monday Sept 20, three vehicles were stolen from local residences in Nome. One of the vehicles was subsequently involved in a motor vehicle crash, damaging the stolen vehicle as well as the vehicle of another resident.

Though all three vehicles were eventually located and recovered, investigation indicates that all three were taken after the owners left the keys in the ignition and the vehicles unsecured.

With the days getting shorter and colder temperatures, people are looking for places to shelter and to get from place to place without being exposed to the weather

The Nome Police Department is actively investigating these thefts and has developed suspects. However, the police need your help in curbing reports of theft and damage to your property.

1. Please remove the keys from your vehicle and lock the doors. Thieves are less likely to bother with a secure vehicle, then one that is an 'easy' target;

2. Report any suspicious activity immediately to the police. Even though the activity may be found to be harmless, it is always better to know. We are here to respond to your needs.

3. Secure your personal items and don't leave them laying about where someone can take them. This includes locking up your bicycle, gas cans, or other items that someone might want to take.

The Nome Police Department appreciates your help and cooperation.

Residents want profiles to reflect importance of subsistence

By Laurie McNicholas

An opportunity to shape descriptions of Bering Strait communities for inclusion in a revised edition of Community Profiles for North Pacific Fisheries-Alaska drew about three dozen participants from throughout the region to a workshop Sept. 10 in Nome.

The workshop was one of six regional meetings conducted in Alaska this year by the Alaska Fisheries Science Center, National Marine Fisheries Service, which published the first version of the profiles in December 2005.

Only four of 15 Bering Strait communities—Elim, Nome, Unalakleet and Shaktoo-lik—are included in the 2005 edition, a thick volume profiling 136 fishing communities throughout the state. The criteria for selecting communities to profile focused on the highest involvement in marine fisheries, especially commercial fishing.

The document is used primarily for environmental impact statements (EIS) developed by government entities. "It is the first place to go for background information for the North Pacific Fisheries Management Council (NPFMC) committees, academics, students and NMFS employees," said Christina Package, a social scientist with the Pacific States Marine Fisheries Commission who helped facilitate the meeting.

In recent years an EIS was developed for a NPFMC management plan to reduce the bycatch of king salmon in the Bering Sea pollock fishery. An EIS currently is in preparation for a NPFMC management plan to reduce chum salmon bycatch in the pollock fishery. The NPFMC also is developing a management plan for the Northern Bering Sea Research Area, which includes the Bering Strait region. Residents of western Alaska communities have become acutely aware of the importance of the EIS process in developing management plans for industrial fisheries "The profiles should include not just subsistence activities, but the importance of them."

- Julie Raymond-Yakoubian, Kawerak Inc.

that affect their communities.

Workshop participants said information about subsistence uses of marine resources such as marine mammals and seabirds should be included in the profiles. They pointed out that some communities have little or no involvement in commercial fisheries. "Subsistence data is really important to our communities," said Julie Raymond-Yakoubian, a social scientist with Kawerak Inc. "The profiles should include not just subsistence activities, but the importance of them."

Tim Smith of Nome suggested including all 65 communities in the Western Alaska Community Development Quota Program in the profiles. The CDQ communities receive a share of the total allowable catch in various Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands fisheries, so they are involved in industrial commercial fisheries whether or not they participate in local fisheries. Fifteen CDQ communities in the Bering Strait region are members of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.

"Adding subsistence criteria to the selection method is suggested a lot," Package said.

Frank Oxereok of Wales said his village is more dependent on subsistence than anything else. "You need to come to each community and talk to the IRA (tribe)," he added. "You have to be out there to understand. Your decisions impact us out there."

"We are trained as social scientists to do things that way, but we won't get the funding," replied Dr. Jennifer Sepez, an Alaska Fisheries Science Center anthropologist who is leading the effort to produce an updated edition of the community profiles document. "If we were to do it that way, we could [profile] only 10 to 15 communities."

Oxereok and other workshop participants noted that communications capabilities such as access to the Internet are limited and uneven in villages. A majority indicated that a paper copy of the profiles document is more useful to them than a compact disc or online version.

Sandra Tahbone of Nome asked Sepez who decides the selection criteria for profiling communities.

"I do, in collaboration with graduate students from the University of Washington," she replied. "We hope to add University of Alaska graduate students." Lopez expressed interest in adding each CDQ community to the 2011 edition of the profiles. However, when pressed to estimate the total number of communities in the revised edition, she said it may be limited to 150 profiles depending on budget constraints.

Noting that results of the 2010 Census will be finalized in mid-2011, Sepez said the revised edition of the profiles will be completed by June 2012 at the latest. She sought assistance from workshop participants to identify data banks for information such as the cost of living and subsistence use in communities. She also listened to their stories of diminishing marine resources and problems in dealing with regulations and regulatory agencies that prioritize the commercial and sport uses of fisheries resources over subsistence uses.

Small group discussions of the descriptive structure of the community profiles produced numerous recommendations for deleting, adding and refining the categories of information they include. Sepez assured participants they will have additional opportunities for input to the 2011 edition, including the review of draft profiles.

Sepez reported that the AFSC has received replies to requests for information from only 15 percent of 296 tribal entities, Native corporations and other entities in Alaska. "We invite someone to sponsor a videoconference with us, especially because we got little information back." she said.

Following the workshop, attendees received an invitation by e-mail to participate in a conference call to summarize input for the 2011 edition of the community profiles gathered at regional meetings. The conference call will begin Sept. 30 at 10 a.m. Alaska Daylight Time. The toll free number to call is (907) 789-6622. No code is needed to access the call.

Crab, salmon fisheries conclude in Norton Sound

By Jim Menard, Alaska Department of Fish & Game

The final fish tickets are coming in from the buyers, and the Alaska Department of Fish and Game is preparing season summaries following closure of Norton Sound's commercial crab and salmon fisheries.

The commercial crab harvest of 417,304 pounds resulted in the biggest payday since Norton Sound went super-exclusive in 1994, creating the small boat crab fishery of today. This year's price per pound of $3.73 was the highest ever paid, and the ex-vessel value of the crab fishery was $1,527,971. Only the big boat crab fisheries of 1978 and 1979 had higher paydays with an ex-vessel value of $1.9 million for each year. The red king crab harvest totaled 2.1 million pounds in 1978 and 2.9 million pounds in 1979.

Salmon fisheries

Rising water levels in the second week of September prevented the counting tower crews at the North River and Kwiniuk River from counting salmon in murky waters, so the projects were pulled.

Preliminary harvest totals for this year's salmon fisheries are 120 kings, 91 sockeyes, 31,826 pinks, 117,054 chums and 62,412 silvers for 113 permit holders. The chum harvest ranked 18th highest and the silver harvest ranked 12th highest. The ex-vessel value was $1.15 million.

Unalakleet subdistrict

Preliminary commercial harvest totals for the Unalakleet subdistrict are 107 kings, 30,598 chums, 10,364 pinks, 62 sockeyes and 33,319 silvers for 58 permit holders.

The Unalakleet River Test Fish project operated by ADF&G with assistance from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. (NSEDC) ended on Sept. 5. Catches were 44 kings, 2,041 chums, 897 pinks, six sockeyes and 468 silvers. The silver harvest ranked ninth highest.

The North River tower escapement goals are 1,200-2,600 kings; no goal established for chums; 25,000 pinks; and 550-1,100 silvers (aerial survey goal). This project was operated by NSEDC with assistance from ADF&G and ended Sept. 7. The cumulative counts were 1,230 kings, 15,995 chums, 151,224 pinks and 7,569 silvers. Silver counts were one-third below the 10-year average.

Shaktoolik subdistrict

Preliminary commercial harvest totals in the Shaktoolik subdistrict are four kings, 39,822 chums, 5,365 pinks, 17 sockeyes and 11,811 silvers for 34 permit holders.

Norton Bay subdistrict

In the Norton Bay subdistrict, the preliminary commercial harvest totals are 6,020 chums, 2,597 pinks, 7 sockeyes and 1,606 silvers for five permit holders.

Elim subdistrict

Preliminary commercial harvest totals in the Elim subdistrict are seven kings, 23,630 chums, 11,620 pinks, three sockeyes and 10,179 silvers for 19 permit holders.

Escapement goals at the Kwiniuk River tower are 300-550 kings; 11,500-23,000 chums; 8,400 pinks; and 650-1,300 silvers (aerial survey goal). This was an ADF&G project with assistance from NSEDC, and it ended Sept. 7. Cumulative counts were 135 kings, 71,388 chums, 634,220 pinks and 8,049 silvers. The silver count ranked 8th out of 10 years.

Golovin subdistrict

In the Golovin subdistrict, preliminary commercial harvest totals are two kings, 16,984 chums, 1,880 pinks, two sockeyes and 5,497 silvers for nine permit holders.

Nome subdistrict

Aerial surveys in the second week of September showed silvers were still moving into rivers of the Nome subdistrict, and the silver salmon subsistence catch limit was waived. Subsistence set gillnet fishing was open seven days a week in the marine waters and subsistence fresh water areas. Beach seining is not allowed.

The escapement goal at the Nome River weir is 2,900-4,300 chums and 13,000 pinks (even-numbered year). This ADF&G project is operated with assistance from NSEDC. The cumulative counts through Sept. 10 were nine kings, 5,793 chums, 165,102 pinks, 43 sockeyes and 4,074 silvers.

High water gouged holes beneath the weir in early morning hours of Sept. 8, and some silvers probably made it upstream without being counted. The silver count ranks fifth highest. The average 90 percent point past the weir is Sept. 9.

The escapement goal at the Snake River weir is 1,600-2,500 chums.

This is a cooperative project between NSEDC and ADF&G. The cumulative counts through Sept. 10 were 43 kings, 6,982 chums, 51,029 pinks, 120 sockeyes and 2,119 silvers. High water gouged holes beneath the weir in early morning hours of Sept. 8, and some silvers probably made it upstream without being counted. The silver count ranks fourth highest. The average 95 percent point past the weir is Sept 7.

Port Clarence district

Salmon Lake will remain closed to salmon fishing to protect spawning sockeye salmon.

Kotzebue district

The commercial salmon fishery closed Sept. 3. Preliminary harvest totals are 271,002 chum salmon by 68 permit holders.

School district fills out ranks, hires JROTC instructor

By Tyler Rhodes

It appears Nome Public Schools has reached the finish line in its long quest to hire a senior instructor for its Junior Reserve Officers Training Corps program.

The Nome Board of Education approved the hire of James Doll Sept. 14 to fill the position that has remained vacant since the departure of Maj. Gary Grennon after the 2008-2009 school year. At that time Nome's JROTC program was terminated due to a lack of funding.

Diligence by the JROTC cadets, shrewd maneuvering by Superintendent Jon Wehde and the financial generosity of Sitnasuak Native Corp., however, brought the program back online for the next two school years. The program has run without a senior instructor since last year under the direction of Kevin Knowlton. Without the senior instructor, the program was operating under probation and was set to lose its sanction at the end of this year.

In recommending the hire of Doll to the board Sept. 14, Wehde cautioned that the funding to cover the position was not set in stone beyond this year. Other hires approved that evening for several positions were approved by the board in an earlier motion. Due to the salary concerns, Wehde recommended the JROTC position be handled separately. "This is the most unusual recommendation for hire that I will be making that I can conceive of," he said. "Other positions approved were part of this budget."

Wehde said donations given the district to cover the costs of the JROTC program will provide for the instructor salary this year. "We have nothing to fear for FY 11, therefore I recommend hire approval for James Doll," he said.

Wehde said he would be presenting a plan to the board at a future meeting to cover the funding beyond the current school year. The board approved Doll's hire by a 3-0 vote. Board members Gloria Karmun, Kirsten Timbers and Barb Amarok were present at the meeting while Barb Nickels and Wilma Osborne were excused.

Other hire approved by the board were Dr. Jane Barclay, elementary/junior high special education; Megan Fowler, early elementary special education; Victoria Ketchum, Title I math teacher; Sherrie Harvey, social worker; Lorlie Schield, Alaska Native program coordinator.

Principals' reports

High school principal Steve Gast informed the board that students were able to participate in butchering a portion of moose, learning different meat cuts and how to take care of the meat. A group of students also went on a fishing trip and learned to fillet and cook their catch.

Gast reported on working to develop dual-credit classes at the high school in conjunction with the University of Alaska Fairbanks Northwest Campus. He said some vocational classes already qualify for dual credits.

Gast said he would like to see a credit-recovery program start in the second semester for students who are falling behind. He said the program would be designed to give students an opportunity to catch up during the school day. Such a program should help reduce school's dropout rate, he said.

The principal also reported on the junior high's three days of teambuilding field trips. He said he went along with the trip for one of the days and was encouraged to see some of the kids open up and develop confidence during the activities.

Gast said that the mentoring and club programs at the high school will continue this year. Gast said administrative intern Kris Busk, who is also a junior high teacher, will work to give the mentoring program a little more focus and direction.

Principal Dave Keller at Nome Elementary School highlighted the new hires at his building. In addition to those whom the board approved later in the meeting, Keller said Whitney Pong joined the staff as a reading aide.

Keller happily reported that the heat had finally been turned back on in the school as the boiler replacement project neared completion. "We have heat," he said. "There were about 10 days that we didn't, but the kids were great and it worked out just fine." He thanked the crew that worked late nights to finish the project. He noted that with the heat now on, the roadwork surrounding the school was the new challenge to be overcome.

Keller said the Nome Eskimo Community tutoring program was getting underway for grades 1-4. He noted the new fifth and sixth grade program, dubbed the 56ers, has its own homework club component.

In other business

Wehde reported that the roof replacement project at the NomeBeltz campus was complete and cost approximately $270,000 less than what was budgeted. Wehde said much of the cost savings came from the building being in better shape that what was anticipated, among other factors. "It's a very good roof, not a single leak," he told the board.

The students of the month were recognized at the Sept. 14 meeting, Janelle Trombridge for the junior high and John Smith at the high school. "The moment she stepped in my classroom, the classroom environment took another two notches up," said junior high English teacher Kris Busk. "Janelle has come back as an eighth grade student and just shined."

High school journalism teacher Susanne Thomas lauded Smith for his determination. "He took it upon himself and showed initiative to be in my journalism class, which is usually reserved for juniors and seniors," she said. "Taking initiative is another aspect of being a role model."

Nome teachers to tour success story

By Tyler Rhodes

A group of Nome Elementary School teachers and district administrators will soon be taking a big field trip to Washington state.

From Oct. 4-6 the group will be visiting Kennewick, Wash., to spend time in the classrooms and amongst the staff in the city's school district. The draw? "Twelve years ago they said 90 percent of our third graders would be at or above reading level," said Nome Public Schools Superintendent Jon Wehde.

Within the last dozen years, the Kennewick schools achieved their goal. Wehde wants a hand-picked group of Nome's teachers to learn firsthand what the Washington district did to make that goal a reality. "Ninety percent achievement of third graders is virtually unheard of; that in itself is reason to go," Wehde said.

Tapped to go on the trip are Meghan Ten Eyck, kindergarten; Sandi Keller, first grade; Mari Lammer, second grade; Liz Korenek-Johnson, third grade; Krista Marvin, fifth/sixth grade; Kris Busk, administrative intern; Janeen Sullivan, administrator; and Jon Berkeley, administrator. Berkely said the teachers going on the trip will in turn be expected to share what they learned with their colleagues after coming home. "It's not just about this trip. It's about bringing it back to Nome Public Schools and taking it forward," Berkeley said.

Wehde, school board member Kirsten Timbers and district personnel officer Bill Gartung had the opportunity to visit the Kennewick district while traveling to a job fair in Seattle last year to recruit teachers to Nome. Wehde said Kennewick's success story is well known to administrators throughout the nation.

After his visit, Wehde said he kept in contact with the district, eventually brokering the deal to let the group of Nome educators come and embed in a number of classrooms. Wehde said the benefits he expects to gain from sending the teachers and administrators to Washington are something that can't be gained from an in-service. Wehde pointed out that Nome's location in relative isolation makes it difficult for staff to easily visit other schools to see how different districts may operate. "The only way to broaden perspective is to take them to a different setting," Berkeley said.

While Nome's teachers will be working with their counterparts in Kennewick, Berkeley said he will be shadowing elementary principals. "I'm keying in on the principals. Where are they day to day? Are they behind their desks? Are they in the classroom?" Berkeley said.

Berkeley said the Kennewick district has similarities in Nome in that it serves a significant number of students from lower-income families and that one cultural group that has lagged farther behind others on standardized test scores - in Nome, it is Alaska Native students; in Kennewick it is the Hispanic population. "There are a list of parallels," Berkeley said.

Wehde said he does not expect an overnight change to occur in Nome's schools following the trip, noting Kennewick took 11 years to reach its goal, experiencing gains and dips along the way. He said the trip is just part of a larger picture to improve the school district. "We found an opportunity that hit the strategic plan perfectly," Wehde said, referring to the guidance plan the district developed last year.

Parents encouraged to participate in the learning process

By Steve Gast, principal Nome – Beltz High School

A couple weeks ago one of my teachers let me borrow his ATV. It was one of the first times I have had the opportunity to travel off road around the area. Once again I continue to learn things. Lesson one: don't try and cross at the mouth of a river, especially at high tide. Lesson two: always fill up with gas before you head out of town. Lesson three: when backing up a six wheeler try not to hit the car parked behind you. I'm still apologizing to Mr. Busk for that one. Lesson four: The water in the Bering Sea is really cold when you're a boy from Texas. Yes, these things actually happened. Those types of silly mistakes got me thinking about the expectations we place on our kids and how we react when they make mistakes.

I know we need to place boundaries and rules in front of our kids as it is a way of life. We also do it for their safety. It is, however, critical that we model the behaviors we expect from them. "Do as I say, not as I do" just doesn't cut it. They deserve more and should expect more from us as parents, teachers and community members. As our kids make mistakes, we need to try and find the lesson to be learned and not simply focus on the punishment to handed down. The real learning comes from the observations our kids make as we deal with the consequences of our mistakes and how we as adults behave in the aftermath.

The philosophy of discipline in a school is always a hot community topic. In the same café you can hear comments about the school being too tough, or too easy, or not very compassionate, and on and on. Such is the dilemma of a school staff. It is our responsibility to develop just the right blend of sternness and compassion. It is our responsibility to make sure we are fair in dispensing consequences while at the same time respecting the individual nature and circumstances of each student. It is not a task taken lightly by our school staff.

We are very cognizant of the fact that when we are discussing student issues, it is a very emotional topic for parents. It is only natural for parents to defend their children. We have been protecting them much of their life. It's what a parent is supposed to do. I know I have been emotional when dealing with issues regarding my own children over the years. So how do we balance that natural urge to protect our kids and at the same time have them learn right from wrong and that every choice carries a set of consequences? Not to make it sound too simple, we do it together, the school and the parents working together to teach our kids to make good choices.

I must digress for just a second. I had the opportunity to be the principal for a day last week at the elementary school as Dr. Keller was upset over the behavior of a first grader in her class. I can almost remember her exact words to me. It went something like this: "I am fed up with this kid. He doesn't listen, he is always messing around with other students, he talks constantly, he threw his book across the room, I've had it with him, I want something at a meeting in Anchorage. My first incident came in the form of a student that was sent to me for a minor incident on the playground. This brought back memories of the time I was doing the very same thing (being an elementary principal for the day) in Rio Vista, Texas. About two hours into my day a teacher came bursting into the office very did what any compassionate principal would do. I assured her I would take care of the situation and be stern with the student. She said, "I hope so" and ushered in the student. The student just happened to be a boy named Kyle. Did I mention that he was my son? I can still see the look on his little face as he was led into the principal's office only to see dad behind the desk. I was now faced with the ultimate dilemma, which hat to wear-the parent or the principal. This was probably the first time I really started talking to myself and answering at the same time. As the principal, I wanted to support our rules and the teacher who was putting up with his behavior, but there was also that parent sitting on my other shoulder saying "Surely he wasn't that bad; the teacher must have been exaggerating at least a bit." My son done, and I want it done now." So I certainly never all at the same time. The above true story put me in a would never do all those things and position to evaluate not only how I felt as a parent but also the role I play in helping students make correct choices and understanding why some actions have consequences. As parents we all hope that when our kids make mistakes or make bad choices, they learn from them but are not hurt by them.

In every situation we must look for the opportunity to teach our kids why they find themselves in a disciplinary situation and how they might avoid it in the future. It is our responsibility as parents and teachers. It is not fun or easy, but it is essential.

I ask you as parents to place your trust in us to handle situations with your children in a respectful, fair, and confidential manner. I ask you to come to us with an open mind to discuss what has occurred and ways we can work as a team to improve the educational environment for all our kids. Our philosophy at Nome-Beltz is not how severely we can punish, but how we can change behaviors so that students learn from mistakes and do not repeat inappropriate behavior or actions. School discipline is a community effort. It starts at home and is reinforced at school. Let's continue to work together.

I have been both a caring and defensive parent many times. I just so happen to also be the principal. I do understand how you as parents feel when your kids are in trouble at school. I could probably write the book on it. (Refer to my above referenced first grade experience with my son.) I simply ask you to let your guard down, roll up your sleeves and work with us to solve the issues in front of us. And yes, there will be consequences at school for misbehavior, but the goal will never be to just punish, it will be to teach and change behavior. I encourage you to be active, positive participants in the process.

Quick-draw delivers the world to Nome students

By Tyler Rhodes

With a quick wit, eye and hand, Neal Nichols Jr. can make a map pour out of his hand and onto the medium of his choice, be it a sheet of butcher paper or a restaurant napkin.

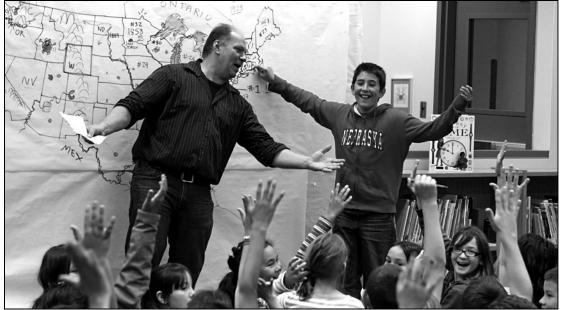

Perhaps even more impressive than his ability to quickly-and accurately—sketch all 50 states from memory, is how he can keep a room full of elementary school students tuned in and learning as he does it.

the names and dates he just rattled off, Nichols calls for "contestants" to come forward and try and answer questions. Winners received a prize from his box.

During this trip, Nichols worked on a map of Alaska with the younger grades while the fifth and sixth graders were quizzed on a map of the Lower 48 states.

On this latest trip through northwest Alaska, Nichols spent a salesman. He said all of his professional pursuits have been pursued in the interest of keeping up his true passion of being a world traveler. "I have hosted well over 1,000 shows worldwide and landed in Nome from Gambell on my 1,327th takeoff and landing," he said.

More on Nichols and his show can be found at: www.geographygameshow.com

Calling his presentation Geography Gameshow, Nichols starts with a blank sheet of paper and ends with a map of a state, country, continent or globe and a room full of kids who can shout out important dates and place-names.

Nichols brought his show back to Nome Sept. 15 after completing a tour of Bering Strait School District schools. Armed with a set of markers and a box full of small items he has picked up from his travels across the globe, Nichols puts on three fastpaced shows, giving students a brief sketch of dates and locations, along with clues on how to remember them. After he draws his map and plants the hints on how to remember week teaching art in Stebbins before running through the game show in Unalakleet, Shaktoolik, Koyuk, White Mountain, Golovin, Elim, St. Michael, Teller, Brevig Mission, Wales, Shishmaref, Savoonga and Gambell. Nichols said the Bering Strait district graciously allowed him to do the Nome show.

Nichols has made several trips to Alaska and Nome, first visiting the region in 2005. He has covered the globe for both work and pleasure. He has worked as a fisherman in the Bering Sea in the 1990s. In addition to the fishing gig, he has also worked as a teacher, truck driver, illustrator, carpenter, international courier and to land in Nome. Lewis said it was his understanding that the weather was bad enough that pilots were not able to land under visual flight rules (VFR). According to Lewis, Olson had requested and was granted a special VFR approach to land; "which is perfectly acceptable," Lewis said.

Lewis said he was told the crash occurred sometime around 10:45 a.m.

As of press time, the wreckage of the Cessna still sat near the top of King Mountain, visible from Dexter. The tundra along a relatively flat bench near the top of the mountain shows where the aircraft impacted the ground and slid through a patch of small boulders. The impact marks continue through the rocks where it appears the right wing would have struck a larger rock standing approximately three feet high. It appears the plane spun 180 degrees after that point, sliding a few more yards and coming to rest facing the direction from which it impacted the mountain.

While the cabin of the plane is largely intact, several pieces of the aircraft were strewn about the crash site. The prop and engine from the right wing were scattered several yards downhill from the wreckage. While the propeller stopped short of where the plane ultimately came to rest, the engine continued on 10 to 20 yards past the aircraft's body.

The plane's nose was badly crumpled. The right side door of the plane remained open beneath which an empty packet of beef jerky and water bottle sat on the tundra. A fire extinguisher sat on the ground near the plane's tail, although there was no sign of fire around the aircraft.

Olson apparently walked away from the wreckage. Alaska State Troopers and Nome Search and Rescue officials say they were not called to respond to the incident.

Olson, from Golovin, represents Senate District T in the state Legislature.

You don't have to be nuts to do a triathlon

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Sports medicine is about keeping people in the game of life by treating acute problems and preventing future injury. For this reason, sports medicine doctors often participate in various sports themselves in order to understand the mechanism of injuries in different activities. With that in mind, I tried something new last weekend: a triathlon sponsored by the Nome-Beltz Swim Team.

A triathlon is an endurance race involving three segments: a swim; a run; and a bike ride. Some triathlons are short distance races called sprints. Others are long all-day events like the Iron-Man Triathlon. Nome's race was designed to be somewhere in between.

The swimming portion involved 20 laps. Just before the race, my brother, who is a real Iron-Man triathlete, informed me that this was considered an Olympic distance. Not a challenge for the faint of heart. I had not done much swimming since elementary school, so I had spent several mornings at the pool working to build up my endurance. On the first day back in the pool, I was reminded that the human body is not designed for the water. You can keep your head above water and breathe, or you can make forward progress. To do both requires training (I might also recommend supplemental oxygen). My goal was to look like Michael Phelps. In the end, I finished the pool segment of the triathlon feeling more like a hunting dog trying to make it back to shore.

The second segment involved a six-mile run. They say every endurance athlete eventually hits "the wall." In Nome, the wall is called Anvil Mountain. Each runner had to complete not just one loop halfway up the mountain, but two laps. I am very comfortable with distance running and even trail running up steep hills. What surprised me is just how much energy is already spent in a triathlon before even putting on the running shoes. Whatever energy remained was quickly absorbed by the mountain.

The final segment of the race was a relatively short six-mile bike ride from the high school to town looping back on the Teller highway. The biking distance of most triathlons of this caliber would be 12-24 miles. I suppose Nome's race is shorter to accommodate for the fact that participants are racing clunky mountain bikes over partial gravel roads up grades that would make most vehicle clutches smell a little smoky.

Here is where I learned the meaning of an athlete's "second wind." In the athletic world, the second wind refers to a sudden release of energy from intracellular power plants called mitochondria that suddenly find an efficient balance of oxygen and glucose about the time an athlete is ready to give up and go home. In Nome, the second wind refers to a 30 mile-an-hour headwind that hits just about the time the course turns uphill. I looked up that long hill toward Icy View and saw the wind sock at City Field pointing straight out behind me. Perhaps my brain was deprived of oxygen, but at this point I was convinced that the other participants had battery-powered engines on their bikes that allowed them to climb the hill into the wind with apparent ease.

They say the race does not always go to the swift, but to the one who keeps on running. I say the race goes to the swift guy who keeps on running. In this sense, our own Dr. Phil Hofstetter is an impressive athlete. Once he left the pool, I never saw him again until I arrived at the finish line to find him waiting comfortably for the rest of the pack.

CANCER

My goal was merely to finish this race, which I did, thank you, to the applause of family who served as a 'pit-crew" of sorts and patiently waited for almost two hours for me to finish. And I became a better doctor learning the etiology of a few new sport-specific injuries. My iliotibial band and I had a little conversation after the race, and my right shoulder required some attention. I was also reminded that to avoid cramps, endurance activities require a balance of nutrition and hydration. Gatorade, which normally tastes like flavored seawater to me, became very refreshing.

I really enjoy sports medicine. I believe we are all athletes for life with bodies that are meant to be active. This is not meant to imply that our chosen sports must take place on a trail or in a swimming pool. I would not for a minute say that a triathlon is for everyone. But I do recognize that we are meant to remain active. And many activities like commercial fishing, Eskimodancing, mining, hunting, and dog mushing often require the same endurance as a triathlon.

The point is that no one is meant to sit on the bench of life. A big part of overall health is keeping the body in shape for whatever activity presents itself. This includes making physical activity a part of daily life and making good nutrition a part of every meal.

It is also helpful to have regular community activities sponsored by regional organizations throughout the year to encourage people to stay active. You may consider training for a future community race, run, or walk. I think you will find the preparation motivating and, regardless of your place at the finish line, you will find the results rewarding.

SING OUT (above)—56er student Chad Callahan sings along to "Waltzing Matilda" while teacher Ian McRae strums the chords to the song on his guitar. McRae's students set their sights on Australia for a musical trip during the class's Expedition Friday, a time set aside for projects and trips.

CUTTING UP (right)—Patrick Okitkon (left) and Aaron Rose cut out illustrations to be used on their scale models of King Island they built under the direction of teacher Keith Conger. The models, built out of layers of cardboard, became a math, geography and art lesson all in one.

at Nome Elementary School, fifth and sixth grade students received nearly all their instruction in all subjects from the same teacher. The classrooms were their own little enclosed educational worlds. This year that world got a lot bigger.

Dubbed the 56ers, the fifth and sixth grade classes at Nome Elementary this year are in the hands of a team of four teachers who are leading a program that is a hybrid of the junior high and elementary school models. Throughout the day, the students move from one teacher to another for different subjects. Some classes are a mix of fifth and sixth graders. Fridays are dubbed Expedition Fridays, where students have two sessions in the day that often involve working on in-depth projects or trips that get them out of the classroom.

The collaborative venture, taught by Thrun, McRae, Keith Conger and Krista Marvin, had simmered as an idea for a few years. The idea started to take a more definitive shape when last year's elementary school principal, Shari Biscotti, approached Thrun about making a change.

Some of the impetus for the change can also be credited to the Anvil City Science Academy charter school, which serves a capped number of fifth through eighth graders in the district. Employing an approach that emphasizes projects that cut across the curriculum and grade levels, the charter school has performed at the highest at the top. "Usually the dreams and visions from before have been thrown out the window," Conger said.

Those dreams and visions have hit the ground running this year and have required adjustments from the collaborative teachers, the school staff and the students. The 56er teachers said the changes have played out well so far.

For the students, being a 56ers means having more responsibility. Calling it "self-governance," the teachers said students are capable of making good decisions for themselves. "The students are responsible for making good choices throughout the day," Conger said.

That philosophy has resulted in changes such as the students walking themselves from their pod to activities such as music or gym. "It's an elementary fact of life that teachers walk students down the halls in lines," Conger said. "We're building a transition that says, 'We think you can do it," he said.

Other changes allow the students to eat their lunch in their classroom or in the shared area in the pod. At the Sept. 14 school board meeting, Nome Elementary School principal Dave Keller remarked on the atmosphere gained from eating lunch together in the pod. "Being in their pod during lunch, it's almost like being in a restaurant setting," he told the board. "The pod just feels more comfortable. It feels like these kids have formed a relationship. It's a team. It's a team among students; it's a team among teachers."

levels in regard to state testing standards. In contrast, Nome Elementary has struggled with meeting the state's goals on the standardized tests.

Thrun said she brought up the idea of incorporating some of what is offered at the charter school several years ago when Carl White was principal at Nome Elementary. Envisioned during White's tenure and planned during Biscotti's, the 56er concept survived through an administration change at the elementary as Dave Keller came on as principal this year. The teachers said they have appreciated the support from the school and district's administration, especially as the elementary experienced turnover

The students also have the option of staying indoors during the recess period to read, catch up on homework or practice their band instrument if they choose. The changes appear to have cut down on behavioral problems and allowed more time for interaction between the teachers and students, helping build a rapport. "The vast majority are taking to it," Thrun said of the new environment.

The new system has also required adaptation from the four teachers. In some ways it has allowed the individual teachers to play to their strengths, teaching the areas in which they are the most versed. It has also meant giving up some of the autonomy. "It is a sacrifice, a lot of us have our pet projects that we've had to give up," Marvin said.

But Marvin and her colleagues said the benefits of collaboration have outweighed any downsides. "I've gained three experts to bounce ideas off," Thrun said. The 56ers' days are structured so that the four teachers have time to meet in the morning to plan and collaborate while students are in classes that take them out of the pod, such as music or gym.

When the students are in the pod, Conger and McRae handle the math courses while Thrun teaches writing and science. Marvin also teaches writing and social studies. Throughout the schedule, each teacher sees each of the approximately 110 fifth and sixth grade students in the school. Thrun, who was teaching kindergarten immediately prior to this year, said she likes having contact with all the students in the grade levels. "When I see this class graduate, I get to say, 'That was my class," she said.

The new system also has the students interacting and learning more with a wider set of peers. Fifth and sixth graders may be sitting side by side during a math lesson. Those who are more proficient in reading are grouped together while those who need more attention are taught together. Similar groupings are used for the different math classes. Students are able to test into the more advanced classes. "It makes it wrong if we don't provide the opportunity to move up to other groups," Conger said.

Marvin and her fellow teachers said they have not sensed any signs of students feeling stigmatized by the separation. Marvin said she related the different paces and styles of learning to how and when each student learned to walk, noting that they all did not acquire that skill at the same age.

In addition to the core areas of study, the teachers are working to infuse cultural- and community-based learning into their lessons. McRae is working with students to develop plays based on Alaska Native stories. Conger had his students build scale models of King Island. Thrun said she is considering having her students bring baked goods to the elders and seniors at the XYZ Center. Marvin has worked to bring artists, both visiting and from the community into the classroom.

A result of these more experiencedbased learning projects, the teachers said, is that some students who may not excel in a traditional math or reading class all of the sudden become leaders when engaged in the project. "It matches more learning modalities," Conger said of the new approach.

Volleyball: Nome bests Bethel, edged out by Kotz

Story and photos by Tyler Rhodes

Simply saying Kotzebue won doesn't quite tell the tale of the long battle played out on the floor of the Nome-Beltz gym Friday night.

The Lady Nanooks volleyball team made the Huskies earn every bit of the victory in a four-game marathon that saw the tide turn for both teams several times. Unfortunately for the Nanooks, close doesn't count, giving the match to Kotzebue which won three games to one.

Kotzebue grabbed the first two games, 25-23 and 25-22. Nome battled back to take the third game 25-23 as both teams tightened up their games, yielding long volleys back and forth. It seemed Nome would keep the tide in its favor right up to the end of the fourth game when Kotzebue was able to gain the upper hand at the last minute and grab the game and match with another 25-23 win. This was the second meeting of the Nanooks and Huskies with the same, close results.

Nome was able to dispatch Bethel Saturday afternoon with three decisive victories. Nome won 25-14, 25-10 and 25-11.

The junior varsity ranks mirrored those of their more experienced teammates. Kotzebue's JV squad bested Nome by winning two out of three games. Each team took at 25-14 victory with Kotzebue winning the tiebreaker 15-10.

Nome's JV squad was able to beat Bethel twice over the weekend. In the first match-up, the Nanooks won two games in a best-of-three series (25-16, 25-18). In Saturday's games, the Nome JV team took three in a row to win a full match (25-14, 25-10, 25-11).

The Nanooks will next play in Home at the Peninsula Challenge Tournament Oct. 1-2.

Cross country: Schmidt tops the field in Bethel

Rosa Schmidt kept up her perfect record this season by winning the Bethel Invitational cross country race Sept. 28 by more than a minute.

Schmidt clocked a time of 25 minutes, 22 seconds on a sandy course under a hot sun.

On the boys side, Emerson Conger was the first Nome runner to cross the line, taking third place in 21:18. The race was won by Bethel's Jeremiah Klejka.

Holden Akiinginaaq Apatiki

Akiinginaaq was born on Sep. 9, 1929 to Homer and Thelma Apatiki. He married Elfie Kulowiyi on Oct. 16, 1949 and together they raised 11 children: Michael, Charlene, Ennis (raised by Homer and Thelma), Evans, Alvina, Kay, Laura, Holden Jr, Jerome, Shem Rose and Iknaay. Holden's best memories are from growing up on the southside (Uughqani) fishing, hunting and camping. The memories on the southside of the island are treasured as we respected the land and the river down there.

Holden was part of a rescue crew when a US Navy plane crashed in the summer of 1955. He and his cousins Bruce Boolowon and Clifford Iknokinok, Sr. went back to Gambell from the crash site on a skin boat to get medicine for the injured Navy crew.

Holden, Elfie and their children and grandchildren camped at Tapghuq, his maternal grandparent Aatghilnguq's home. He and Elfie picked salmon berries, sometimes filling their 20 gallon wooden barrel at what they called Elfie's garden "Aghquvluk." Holden also caught a polar bear right

Holden was raised in a Christian home and served faithfully as a trustee for the Gambell Presbyterian Church for many years. He also served on the Gambell City Council for 25 years. He was also honorably discharged from the Alaska Army National Guard after six years of service to his country.

Holden is survived by all his children, siblings Ralph Sr, Jerome and Edna, 95 grandchildren and great grandchildren; Noongwooks of Savoonga, Tungiyans, Imergans of Gambell and many more ramka in the Pugughilghmii clan. He's preceded in death by his parents Homer and Thelma, his wife, Elfie, his grandson Eric, his sister Inez Campbell, brother Hugo Tun'ghi Apatiki, his grandparents Suluk and Qisgenga and Aatghilnguq and Utuqa.

Rock Creek up for sale

NovaGold says need to focus on larger projects spurs decision

By Tyler Rhodes

NovaGold Resources announced Tuesday that it is officially putting its Rock Creek gold mine project up for sale.

According to the firm's director of communications, Rhylin Bailie, the Canadian mining company has hired an undisclosed outside firm to solicit offers for the open-pit project just outside of Nome. "We do think that the project holds value in the right portfolio," Bailie said. "It just doesn't fit in our portfolio anymore."

According to Bailie, NovaGold is placing its focus on two larger projects, Donlin Creek near the Kuskokwim River, and Galore Creek in British Columbia. The Rock Creek

Mine, while at a more advanced stage in development, is tiny in comparison to the two other projects. "Our two big projects, Donlin Creek and Galore Creek, are ramping up, and we need to focus our time and resources at those projects," Bailie said.

Bailie said employees working at the mine were informed of the decision Tuesday morning. Approximately 30 direct employees and contractors have been working at the mine at any given time recently. Bailie said the staffing at the site will remain at its current level as NovaGold solicits offers for the project.

Ordinance would end overnight camping at Belmont Beach

By Laurie McNicholas

Nome Common Council members moved a slowly evolving solution to the land use conflicts at Belmont Beach on the east side of the Snake River closer to implementation at their meeting Monday.

The council heard first reading of an ordinance to amend section 13.25.060, which prohibits overnight camping, the erection of temporary residential structures and the storage of personal property, to expand the area included in the prohibition southward to an area of Belmont Beach adjacent to the southernmost portion of lot 61A, block 57. The council moved the ordinance to a second reading, public hearing and final action at the next regular meeting.

The proposed ordinance addresses land use conflicts between residents of the Belmont Beach area and gold dredge miners who park their dredges on the beach. On Sept. 13 the council adopted an amended recommendation of the Nome Port Commission to separate the gold miners from the recreation and subsistence users of the beach by establishing a boundary between them and designating an area of the beach for a boat ramp.

The council heard first reading of a proposed ordinance to amend sections 10.30.030 (a) to prohibit dogs from Anvil City Square and specific playgrounds and unanimously moved it forward for second reading and a public hearing. The amended ordinance will apply to the Nome Elementary School grounds and to any playground owned or maintained by the city.

The council approved by a 4-1 vote first reading of an ordinance to accept a right of way easement over Lucy's Way (on the side of Anvil Mountain near the Panorama Subdivision) moving the ordinance forward for second reading and a public hearing. Councilman Stan Andersen voted against the ordinance, through which private property owners would grant a perpetual right of way to the city across a roadway in the Lucy's Way subdivision. In accepting the right of way offer, the city also would accept maintenance responsibilities for the road.

Andersen voiced opposition to a proposed resolution to extend the term of agreement with Bristol Environmental and Engineering Services Corp. (BEESC) as acting city engineer. The city entered into a contract with BEESC Oct. 14, 2003, and the current addendum agreement extended the contract from Oct. 14, 2008 to Oct. 14, 2010. Senior Engineer James Vogel has served as main engineer under the entire term of the contract.

Andersen said he would rather put the contract out to bid to see what others have to offer because Randy Romenesko, who has managed several city construction projects, plans to terminate his agreement with the city for consulting services in December of this year. The council rejected the resolution to extend

BEESC's contract by a 3-2 vote. Councilmen Jerald Brown and Randy Pomeranz voted in

Flu shot clinics coming early

Plenty of vaccine should be available region-wide

By Tyler Rhodes

Like it or not, the more unpleasant realities of winter are on their way.

The cold. The blizzards. The darkness. And, come December and January, the flu.

In contrast to last year when vaccine supplies were short due to the new threat of H1N1, or Swine Flu, Norton Sound Health Corp. is reporting fully stocked supplies and plans for multiple vaccination clinics. "We believe we have received more than enough this year to meet demand," said Chris Kilby, director of Public Health Nursing for NSHC.

Letters -

Dear Editor,

After reading the 9/16/10 letter Ms. Karen Nanouk wrote about the outrageous salary paid to Bering Strait Native Corporation Board members I totally agree with her viewpoint. Man...it must be really nice to be a child of one of the BSNC Board members. Imagine the expensive Christmas and birthday gifts they must receive while so many of our shareholders are struggling to survive, so many stressing about the upcoming holidays, so many praying and dreaming for that huge illusionary dividend check that never comes, so many shattered dreams and...so many that contemplate suicidal thoughts! Yes, it is time for us shareholders to put an end to draining of our dividends by these outrageous salaries

Did the board members let the shareholders know in 2008 that NANA gave BSNC 11 million dollars? Was there ever a public accounting of that money, or...was that also paid out to bonus for the board members? I would like to thank Karen Nanouk and Francine Hopson for noticing the Holy Moly differences being a shareholder and board members.

Thanks! Eddie Tocktoo Seward, Alaska 99664

Dear Alaskans,

Alaska isn't Alaska anymore - we the people for Alaska (Native and non-Native) have to take responsibility of Alaska's fishing resources (Beringa-the Bering Sea region and North Pacific).

In the early 70s, decisions worldwide started in motion to divide the world fishing resources. By the early 80s our President signed on the (EEZ) Law of the Seas, the 200-mile exclusive economic zones around and off the coastal zones of the world to be managed by the people living on shore of their coastline (Continental Shelf), especially the fishing communities that lie next to the resource will have a greater interest in seeing the resource is managed properly. Thus, Alaska (People-State) need to take responsibility.

Do believe this would be now, if the people with political influence would take the subject up. Eventually someone will because eventually Alaska will have control of its fishing resources from birth (spawn) to the final marketing.

Sincerely. Bruce Lemke Anchorage, Alaska 99509

Port Commission rejects lone bid to prepare port development plan

By Laurie McNicholas

Twenty firms considered the City of Nome's request for proposals to prepare a port development plan, but only one submitted a bid on the project, City Manager and Port Director Josie Bahnke told members of the Nome Port Commission at their meeting Sept. 23. "The other 19 who did not respond may feel $30,000 is not enough," she added.

Harbormaster Joy Baker reported that several potential bidders contacted her to ask if the project budget of $30,000 could be increased. "I said 'no,' and none of them replied."

Bahnke said the city has no obligation to accept the lone proposal from Moffatt and Nichol of Seattle, WA, and she likes to have at least three choices to evaluate and score. She also said the costs of getting to and from Nome were not reasonably considered in the proposal.

We could pare down the scope of the project," Bahnke suggested. "We asked for many deliverables." She said a lot of information needed for the plan such as state trends is available in-house. Noting that Eileen Bechtol is developing several plans under contract with the city, Bahnke said Bechtol could incorporate readily available information in the port development plan and work with PND Engineers of Anchorage on technical aspects.

Bechtol owns Bechtol Planning and Development in Anchor Point. PND currently is developing options for repair and expansion of the barge ramp at the port. Bahnke said neither firm responded to the RFP for the port development plan. In response to questions from commissioners, Bahnke said Bechtol told her it was out of the question for her firm to respond to the RFP because the project required an engineering firm, the scope of work was unrealistic and the project budget was insufficient.

Commissioner Charlie Lean said it's a red flag that the city received only one proposal out of 20 firms that considered bidding on the proj-The commissioners unanimously adopted a motion to reject the bid from Moffatt and Nichol and work with in-house entities on a port development plan until they can come up with more definitive plans.

Offshore mining plans

Bahnke said officials from the Alaska Dept. of Natural Resources Division of Mining recently informed her of plans to open the west beach to a one quarter mile limit for offshore mining. She said DNR issued 45 permits for gold mining dredges this year, half of which park in the harbor while the other half are scattered from Belmont Point to the mouth of the Nome River and up and down the beach.

"DNR is looking at up to 60 [off-shore mining] permits," Bahnke reported. "There is a moratorium in California on offshore dredging. We lack space." Ideas under consideration for solving that problem include development of a campground near dredge 6, she said.

American Roots

We are the grass roots of government. The people of Nome are what make America tic. We are the layer of government that is in direct contact and source of strength for our state and nation. Our attitudes about local government are carried forward to Juneau and Washington, DC.

What happens in our town travels up through our roots to all branches of government. We are the voters who put people in office. We have the power to make government good and responsive to citizens. We also have the power to allow bad government by doing nothing. If we stay home and let the other guy vote, we will get what

We do have a problem. Many folks who call Nome their home can't vote in our municipal election, not can they run for office. They live outside of the city limits. The rest of us will have to do our civic duty and get to the polls next Tuesday. Let's do it. Let's vote for good government. Even though Nome has very few lawns, the grass roots of this tundra town are what America is made of, not tea leaves.

State of Alaska in the news

Compiled by Diana Haecker AFN endorses Murkowski

In a special session, the Alaska Federation of Natives board of directors ratified a resolution to endorse Lisa Murkowski in her bid to go against the odds and remain in the senatorial race against tea party-backed Joe Miller and Democrat Scott McAdams. The resolution will be introduced to AFN's full membership at their annual convention coming up October 21-23.

AFN co-chair and state senator Albert Kookesh said that AFN does not take endorsements lightly. In the past, AFN endorsed former governor Tony Knowles, congressman Don Young and Senator Ted Stevens. AFN president Julie Kitka said that given the fast pace of developments in this particular race, and its high-profile nature, the AFN Legislative Committee felt it appropriate to take immediate action to recommend endorsement of Senator Murkowski. Kitka said she looks forward to lively political discussion on the convention floor when the resolution is up for consideration by the entire AFN membership.

Meanwhile, Alaska Governor Sean Parnell endorsed Joe Miller in the U.S. Senate race during a joint event in Wasilla. Parnell called Miller a "principled leader" the state needs in Washington. The endorsement went also the other way around as Miller endorsed Parnell as he is seeking the governor's seat in an election. Parnell moved up to be governor after Sarah Palin quit the job halfway through her term. As Miller is going on the record for not condoning Alaska receiving federal education money or other federal earmarks, reports surfaced - and were confirmed – that he accepted federal subsidies when owning a farm in Kansas, where he came from prior to moving to Alaska in 1994.

Congressman Don Young went on the record saying that he'd endorse neither senatorial candidate.

Bill Walker won't be a write-in choice

Number 2 in the GOP primaries, Bill Walker, announced on Monday that he would not get back into the race for governor as a write-in. Last week, Walker, who was running strongly on his experience as an oil and gas expert, said he'd consider a write-in campaign after U.S. Senator Lisa Murkowski made the announcement that she would be a write-in candidate in the senatorial race. Walker also looked into the option to run as a Alaskan Independent or Libertarian, but both parties didn't respond favorably. According to Walker's Facebook post, he said it was a most difficult decision made after analysis, prayer and input from family.

Prosecutor in Ted Stevens case commits suicide Washington (AP)— An attorney says a Justice Department prosecutor who was part of the team that convicted Sen. Ted Stevens has killed himself. Attorney Robert Luskin says 37-year-old Nicholas A. Marsh committed suicide on Sunday amid an investigation into whether he and other prosecutors in the case against Stevens acted improperly. Allegations surfaced that information was not turned over to Stevens' defense team and Attorney General Eric Holder ultimately dismissed the case and vacated the guilty verdict.

Parnell vs. "Frankenfish"

Governor Sean Parnell weighed in as the Federal Food and Drug Administration contemplates to approve genetically engineered Atlantic salmon for human consumption. Parnell said genetically engineered salmon poses significant potential threats to the environment, consumer health and the wild seafood industry. He sent off a letter to commissioner Margaret Hamburg asking for a report on environmental risks and impacts on wild stocks and said he was concerned about potential dangers associated with escaped genetically engineered fish.

State releases study of fatal airplane crashes in Alaska

According to a study by the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services Section of Epidemiology, the number of fatal aviation crashes between January and August 2010 was higher than those compared to years past. This year alone, 19 people died and eight were seriously injured in ten plane crashes, not counting the military cargo plane that went down shortly after leaving Elmendorf and the plane that went missing at Katmai National Park.

The plane, its pilot and three passengers still have not been found. This year's flurry of plane accidents prompted the study. Although most of the crashes, including the crash that claimed the life of former Senator Ted Stevens and four others, are still under investigation, the study cites the wet and foggy weather as a possible culprit for the high number of plane tragedies.

'Besides being difficult to fly in, the long stretch of poor weather may have affected pilot proficiency by limiting time in the air," said Mary O'Connor with the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, who co-authored the study. "Pilot hours may have been further reduced due to the high price of aviation fuel and other operational costs." The study recommends to continue crash prevention programs such as the Medallion Foundation's simulators and training programs, and Federal Aviation Administration and Alaskan Aviation Safety Foundation-sponsored safety seminars. The study also recommends that weather information should be enhanced and made easily available for pilots.

High winds pummel south-central, Anchorage

High winds whipping through the Cook Inlet and Mat-Su Region over the weekend wreaked havoc with power lines, phone lines and caused massive disruptions of power supply. More than 200 trees fell on power lines, causing small fires and power outages for days. In some areas, the power was out for three days, while fire departments responded to hundreds of calls for service. In the Mat-Su area alone, 2,500 homes were without power on Friday and early Saturday.

In their own words: Municipal candidates answer to the Nugget

The Nome Nugget sent out questionnaires to the candidates running for city council, school board and utility board seats in the Oct. 5 municipal election. Candidates were given 200 words to answer each of three questions. The following are the responses received by The Nugget.

Nome Common Council Seat B: Jim West Jr., Cliff Johnson

Jim West Jr. (incumbent – appointed)

1) Why should voters elect you? What do you hope to accomplish as a common council member?

Born and raised in Nome, degree in business administration, own and operate various businesses here in Nome, 28-year member of the Nome Volunteer Fire and Search and Rescue Department, currently a captain, six-year member of the Nome Ambulance Department, 10plus years as a member of the Local Emergency Planning Commission, past member of the Nome Joint Utility Board, 12 years and current chairman of the Nome Port Commission. I have been involved with and completed projects which include building the Port of Nome Phase 1 and Phase 2, building the new power plant, the continuing phases of upgrades on the water and sewer system, new public safety and equipment storage buildings, new landfill solid waste cell.

Preparing and growing Nome's future for the benefit of the younger generation through responsible fiscal management. Nome is a first-class city with outstanding city services that the people have come to enjoy. We have been very lucky on being able to find the grant funding to help with the much needed upgrades thoughout the city, utility, school systems.

2) The planning commission has batted around the idea of annexation for the outlying areas of Nome. Would you be in support of expanding Nome's boundaries? If so, where and why?

Yes. I am a supporter of annexation out to Rock Creek Mine, the facility is worth over $200 million, adding that to the tax rolls would be a huge increase in revenue for the city, if they ever get up and operational, the city as a whole would then again benefit through economic development jobs and services keeping Nome green. There's got to be a happy medium balancing on expected services and cost of providing the services, it would be something definitely worth looking into spreading the costs over a larger tax base group.

3) What are the top three issues facing the City of Nome? Please explain why each issue is a priority.

A) The City of Nome has been very lucky in the past 10 years to be on the receiving end of federal dollars. With the political climate up in the air, we face the possibilities not being so fortunate, we now have to stay within our means and enjoy what we have built. With this funding we have upgraded our infrastructure, which we dearly needed and have to maintain the services to which all of Nome citizens have come accustomed.

B) The City of Nome does and will continue supporting the education system. Finding the balance is challenging but it must be done, for we are growing the future of Nome.

C) With the coming of global warming, the shipping lanes will be opened up more, making Nome a natural stopover point. We have seen over the past few years more activity out on the Bering Sea, and our port has seen an increased use. We need to one, either increase the length to get to a deeper depth to accommodate the larger vessels. This potential would help in lowering the freight cost to the people of Nome along with helping the economy by providing more local jobs. Nome is lucky to have two ports that could be developed, in town and out at Cape Nome. In my opinion, the development of Cape Nome, which is naturally deep, but without protection would be my first choice. This would push potential development out towards Cape Nome or adding to the existing causeway would be a little more expensive, but the result would be the same

I would like to encourage everyone to get out and exercise your right to vote.

Cliff Johnson (challenger) 1) Why Should Voters Elect You? What do you hope to accomplish as a common council member?

I think I would bring a different point of view to the city council, I like to think a new and maybe re-refreshing point of view. I would also hope that the voters would feel very comfortable and that I am very approachable, for being able to talk openly with me, to really address their concerns.

I want to accomplish an open and accessible means for communication, between the average community member and the city council.

2) The planning commission has batted around the idea of annexation for the outlying areas of Nome. Would you be in support of expanding Nome's boundaries? If so, where and why?

No. I would not support for annexation for the outlying areas of Nome. Nome has enough issues it needs to deal with, let alone take on more responsibility, just for the fact of creating more tax income and government rules and regulation! Believe it or not, more government is not always better.

3) What are the top three issues facing the City of Nome? Please explain why each issue is a priority.

1) Pro-development...I don't think the city as a whole has done all it can to help the small business owner in establishing a good foundation for sustainability and growth. There should be some incentives in place for the small business owner, things like tax incentives, different cost-saving tools, like discounted services, etc.

2) Also do more to establish Nome as a developing hub for all government services, including different incentives, favorable conditions and terms for barging companies, construction companies, cruise, tour, mineral exploration, airlines, Coast Guard, Native corporations, and state and federal agencies.

3) Do more for the local taxpayer...Things like: On a case by case, I don't think we should have to pay to use the Mono-fill, (the old city dump/land fill (inert garbage) to tear down and get rid of a old abandoned eyesore building. It should be free, especially if it helps to make Nome a nicer, cleaner place to live. Things like that, it's the little things that help the average citizen taxpayer.

Nome Common Council Seat F: Tim Smith, Josie Stiles

1) Why should voters elect you? What do you hope to accomplish as a common council member?

I would bring a different perspective to the council. Nome has many opportunities because of its geographic location and the changes that are taking place in the Arctic. Increased activity in research, travel, transportation, communications and mineral development will be happening all around us. If we don't position ourselves to take advantage of these opportunities, someone else will.

The city should take a larger perspective and strengthen our economy based on the things that will be happening in the northern Bering Sea and Arctic Ocean. Our harbor is the best one north of the Pribilofs, and it could be improved. That will give us a tremendous advantage as shipping through the Bering Strait increases.

Fish stocks are moving north and commercial fishing and fish processing could provide ways to expand and diversify our economy. The CDQ program offers an unprecedented opportunity for economic development that has been overlooked by our city government for too long. I have studied the CDQ program since its inception and have ideas about how to make it deliver a lot more benefits for local people.

I support education. We need to do more to help our students succeed in school. Quality education pays lifelong dividends and is one of the best investments we can make in the future.

2) The planning commission has batted around the idea of annexation for the outlying areas of Nome. Would you be in support of expanding Nome's boundaries? If so, where and why?

I attended a recent meeting with the local boundary commission held in Old St. Joe's to talk about options for annexation; it is not a simple undertaking.

State law provides seven ways to annex but only three that are viable for Nome: Election by a majority of the voters in the annexed area; election by a majority of Nome voters and a majority of voters in the annexed area; action by the boundary commission and the state Legislature.

There is no assurance that we could annex the outlying areas, even if we think it is a good idea. Most of the outlying area residents who spoke at the meeting were opposed to annexation. Before we begin the annexation process, we should survey the voters living outside the city to see if there will be any chance of getting enough votes for passage.

Annexation would increase the property tax base but at the same time, the new taxpayers would have the right to expect city services such as school busing and snow removal. It's not obvious that it would result in a net revenue increase for the city. We would have to analyze the costs versus the benefits before we decided to petition for annexation.

3) What are the top three issues facing the City of Nome? Please explain why each issue is a priority.

1) The high cost of living. High energy prices are driving up the costs of everything. Income has not kept pace. High living costs reduce the quality of life for all of us and even more so for the elderly, unemployed or those with low-paying jobs. When people are struggling to make ends meet, there isn't much left for the things that make life enjoyable.

2) Economic development. Nome's economy has been in a slump for a long time. The private sector based on gold mining, tourism, services and retail sales has suffered with the international recession. State and federal government spending is down and likely to be that way for a while.

The first thing we should do to build our local economy is move the NSEDC headquarters to Nome. We should take the CDQ program back from Anchorage and Seattle and use it to create fisheries related jobs and economic development at home as intended.

3) Inadequate housing. We need more quality, energy efficient, affordable housing in Nome, but land and construction costs make it prohibitively expensive to build. It is difficult to attract professional people to our community if they can't find good housing, and we need to look for ways to meet those needs.

Josie Stiles

1) Why should voters elect you? What do you hope to accomplish as a common council member?

I want to be elected because I am willing and qualified. I have a diverse background and 17 years of experience on several boards and councils. I have also been employed as a public servant for the past 30 years, which includes six years with the City of Nome. I have served on the Nome Community Center board for seven years, Bering Sea Women's Group board for six years with four years as president, Unalakleet Native Corp. board for four years, Alaska Commemorative Coin Commission for three years, and am currently on the Nome Arts Council board with service the past eight years and the recent five years as president. I am also currently serving on the Iron Dog Snowmobile Race Board and have been there for five years. My whole career has been based on public service. I have always strived to be involved, make a difference and give back to our community. I will bring an open mind, fair and equal judgment, and will promote ethical behavior. I want to be an ambassador and good diplomat for Nome.

2) The planning commission has batted around the idea of annexation for the outlying areas of Nome. Would you be in support of expanding Nome's boundaries? If so, where and why?

I would encourage a process of information, research, listening and meeting with constituents and hopefully bringing it to a vote. If the voters decided yes, I would then support annexation for the outlying areas. This is a critical issue that needs those involved to decide what's best for our local government. Currently, there are those in the outlying areas utilizing services. It needs to be determined what is fair for everyone, let the voters decide.

3) What are the top three issues facing the City of Nome? Please explain why each issue is a priority?

Striving for a balanced budget is always a priority in managing funds and continually evaluating the quality of services that the City of Nome provides.

The growth of our town is a major issue. Port expansion is important and traffic has doubled, almost tripled, and hopefully we can get the Coast Guard to have their presence here. We also need to carefully plan for and monitor offshore mining. Gold is a record $1,300 an ounce today. I hope that we can continue to strengthen our relationship with Alaska Gold to help accommodate this gold rush. Other growth is focused on a new hospital, public safety building and a state building. Roads and utilities are constantly being maintained and expanded. We need to continue energy-saving options while being environmentally sensitive.

Decreased federal funding is a concern. Our country is in an era of restoring itself after a major recession and an influx of American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) funds from our government. Funds will most likely decrease with a now trillion-dollar debt. We need our city government to be self-sustaining and carefully look at other options of revenue while prioritizing and maintaining city services.

(incumbent – unopposed) 1) Why should voters elect you?

What do you hope to accomplish as a common council member? I think that my background in finance is helpful with analyzing budgets and proposals. There are several items that I would like to see accomplished, including finalizing a smoking ordinance, making the playgrounds safer for our children by banning dogs in the playgrounds and possibly an ordinance regarding cell phone use while driving. I would also like to find a way to eliminate sales taxes on some basic essentials like groceries. Another goal I have is to see more use of renewable energy and energy efficiency in public and private buildings.

2) The planning commission has batted around the idea of annexation for the outlying areas of Nome. Would you be in support of expanding Nome's boundaries? If so, where and why?

This is an idea that has been discussed in various forms on and off for decades. I think there are still a lot of details to work out, such as whether we would create special service districts with lower tax rates. I think any annexation that would occur should encompass the power grid and include the areas that have children attending school in Nome.

3) What are the top three issues facing the City of Nome? Please explain why each issue is a priority.

Issues facing Nome include the high cost of everything-primarily linked to high energy costs, the easy access to alcohol for teens and other individuals that maybe should not be drinking, and the level of dust and other contaminates in the air from the traffic on the roads. I believe the struggles that have affected the school district over the last several months are not over, and that concerns me as well, as it seems to have polarized the community.

School Board Seat A: Jeri Ann Tomter, Marie Tozier

Jeri Ann Tomter

1) Why should voters elect you? What do you hope to accomplish as a school board member?

Voters should elect me because I care about our schools and all kids in our community. My daughters, Katy and Elizabeth, go to school at Nome Public Schools and the future of our school district is very impor-

One thing I hope to accomplish as a school board member is for us to come together as a community and to continue to support our teachers, school administrators and students. If we all step up and help, this community will continue to grow. We are a team and need to work together.

2) What do you see as the most positive area or element within our district? What area or elements need the most improvement?

People are the most positive area in our district. We have great students and staff. My kids have had wonderful teachers who have encouraged parent/guardian help and involvement in the classroom. I am an active parent helper in the classroom and see firsthand the positive effect it has on kids when parents help out.

The area that needs the most improvement is that there is so little parent/guardian help and volunteering in the schools. I encourage parents/guardians to talk with the teachers and ask how you can help out. If you can't help in the classroom, helping the teacher with a task or project from home is just as important. Teachers and kids appreciate any help we can give.

3) Nome Public Schools has just come through a period of turmoil with turnover in both the administrative and board ranks. Realizing there will always be differences of opinions in the community, what can the board do to help heal the rift that occurred and reassure the public that they are being heard?

Our community has just gone through a very difficult time, in regards to Nome Public Schools. I would support having a board procedure training on how a school board operates for all school board members. Rather than sending all five board members out for board training, look into having a professional come to Nome and conduct the training here. It will save in airplane tickets, hotel rooms and per diem. In addition to board training, a review of the NPS Board Policy manual and Strategic Plan as a full board would also be a step forward together. I feel that the strategic plan is a good tool and implementing the timeline targets to reach the goals is realistic. I care about our community and schools. I will listen to concerns, and I will work together with others as a board member in a respectful manner to grow our community.

Marie Tozier

1) Why should voters elect you? What do you hope to accomplish as a school board member?

My name is Marie Tozier. I hope that Nome voters elect me because they recognize my love of learning and commitment to education. I grew up in Nome. I attended Nome Elementary School and graduated from Nome-Beltz High School in 1989. I received an associate's degree in 2005 from the University of Alaska Fairbanks-Northwest Campus and a bachelor's degree in arts and sciences in 2008. In 1998, Tok and I decided to home-school our 4year-old twins. Since then we have home-schooled our seven children. We are enrolled in NPS Extension Program, which offers a unique opportunity to homeschool while participating in school activities and contributing to the community.

As a school board member, I would like to see improvement in the on-going battle against low test scores in our district. I believe that focusing on reading proficiency, at all grade levels, will improve overall school performance. Improvements in reading will be reflected in every other subject. I look forward to finding ways to involve the community in reaching this goal. If we can find ways to support young students learning how to read and older students improving their reading skills, we can demonstrate that we value each student.

2) What do you see as the most positive area or element within our district? What area or elements need the most improvement?

The greatest assets of our school district are our community and our students. Nome is a hub for diverse cultures and many groups who value education from preschool to college. Nome has a healthy Head Start program, an elementary school, a charter school, a high school, the extensions program, NACTEC and Northwest Campus. Many businesses reward educational excellence by offering scholarships to students upon graduation. I am continually impressed with the students of Nome Public Schools. From sports to drama productions, our students find ways to excel that bring pride to Nome alumni, friends and family.

One area where I would like to see improvement is the performance gaps on standardized tests.

This is addressed in the NPS Strategic Plan in a number of ways. There are goals set for relevant curriculum, proficiency on state tests and parent mentoring. The most difficult part of the plan will be the implementation—to see these goals to reality. As a school board member I can offer experience in bridging parents with the education experience of their children. If elected, I will work towards meeting these goals.

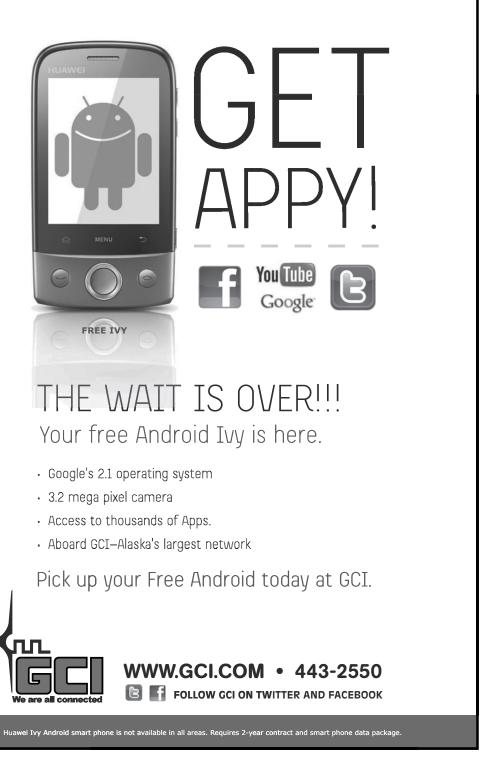

3) Nome Public Schools has just come through a period of turmoil with turnover in both the administrative and board ranks. Realizing there will always be differences of opinions in the community, what can the board do to help heal the rift that occurred and reassure the public that they are being heard?

The school board can foster an open, respectful atmosphere to assure parents and the public that their concerns are valid and taken seriously by the board. The community should have adequate means to address their concerns: at board meetings and via personal contact with teachers, administrators and board members. Each member serves because they desire the best for their children and the students of Nome Public Schools, and should act with that as their guiding principle.

Betsy Brennan

1) Why should voters elect you? What do you hope to accomplish as a school board member?

I believe I am the best person for the job! I feel passionately that education is the key to success in life for all children. I was elected to a three-year term on the Nome School Board from October 2006 until October 2009. During those three years I worked hard, and missed just one board meeting. Since then, I have attended the majority of NPS board meetings and know the issues facing the district. I worked on the committee that developed the new Nome Public Schools Strategic Plan.

I have lived in Nome for 22 years and have served on various boards and organizations: The Nome Preschool Association board, Bering Sea Woman's Group board, Nome Community Center board, and the Nome PTSA. My husband and I are raising our two children, and I am proud they attend NPS. As a member of the Nome School Board, I can be involved in the community I love and use my talents. As a board member I hope to assist NPS staff realize the strategic plan and new vision statement: Students will be engaged in a quality education that ensures student proficiency through a challenging curriculum that embraces diversity and is culturally responsive.

One of the most positive elements within our district is the new strategic plan that is now in place and approved by the school board. I was fortunate enough to be a part of the process in developing the plan this past year. I am excited about the outcome and have already seen many changes in the way the district is approaching education and tackling areas of concern. An example: the changes made in the fifth and sixth grade. Another positive element is the wonderful staff of NPS. These dedicated people keep our school running and truly care for all our students. I think one area that needs more improvement is in is the recruitment and retention of qualified staff. The district saw a large turnover in teaching staff this past year. Specifically, the district's special education department needs to be fully staffed at the beginning of each school year. This has been a problem for two years in a row. Another area needing improvement is exploring different ways to reach out to parents/guardians and encouraging their involvement in our schools. Studies show parent involvement in their children's education is one of the most important factors in student success.

3) Nome Public Schools has just come through a period of turmoil with turnover in both the administrative and board ranks. Realizing there will always be differences of opinions in the community, what can the board do to help heal the rift that occurred and reassure the public that they are being heard?

I believe one of the greatest things the Nome Public School Board can do is follow its own policy manual and bylaws and conduct all its business in an open and public manner in accordance to state law. This would go a long way in healing the rift and reassuring the public.

I also believe school board member training is very important. Board members are asked to make decisions on issues ranging from student safety to finances to personnel issues, and it is essential to receive proper training during their terms. Nome Public Schools is a member of the Statewide Association of Alaska School Boards. Board members should attend various workshops and trainings to help better educate themselves on their roles as elected officials. Board members who approach their jobs with a desire to become more knowledgeable will be more effective as board members.

The school board also should hold a yearly retreat or meeting to discuss the board's goals and develop and evaluate superintendent goals. The school board should also welcome open discussion by members of the public on a regular basis in work sessions and more informal settings.

1) Why should voters elect you? What do you hope to accomplish as a school board member?

I have a bachelor's degree in rural development, and I believe that solutions for the school district can come from within the community. As a school board member, I am a visible member of this community, and I want to serve as an advocate and fair voice for each student, parents, guardians to seek more understanding and communication between students/parents and the school. As a school board member, I will work hard to have a solid, unified board, so that the students, parents, teachers and administrators can achieve their desired goals.

2) What do you see as the most positive area or element within our district? What area or elements need the most improvement?

Back in May, when I went to the high school graduation, I witnessed this community award $500,000 in scholarships to graduating students who are seeking to continue their higher education.

An area that needs most improvement is more kids need to stay in school, from the time they enter into the seventh grade and when they reach their senior year, need to support each student so they may graduate from Nome Beltz. Another area is more community involvement with academics and sporting activities; we as community members and graduates need to support the efforts of our kids of Nome.

3) Nome Public Schools has just come through a period of turmoil with turnover in both the administrative and board ranks. Realizing there will always be differences of opinions in the community, what can the board do to help heal the rift that occurred and reassure the public that they are being heard?

Each school board elected must be held accountable; school board members must represent every student and parent and the school district. The goal of the school board and administration is to ensure that more kids need to stay in school and not drop out. I believe the high school has a good principal who wants to see the kids succeed within his school. It's the school board's obligation to provide leadership and support so that the school and community can succeed.

A personal experience earlier this month, I had a chance to meet the new high school principal, Steve Gast; I was impressed with him. I had met him and in five minutes he had asked me to stop by his office for coffee. We as a community and school board must support good administrators.

School Board Seat E: Barb Amarok, Joe Lyon

Barb Amarok (incumbent – appointed) 1) Why should voters elect you?

1) Why should voters elect you? What do you hope to accomplish as a school board member?

My name is Barb Amarok. Nome has been my family's home for five generations. I'm asking the community to elect me to the school board because I am passionate about education; my father and my aunt were teachers and I followed their examples. I have worked in the school classrooms, in the halls, in the offices where students have been sent, and in the conference room with administrators.

I have a vested interest in the effectiveness of the school because members of my family are always enrolled; currently, I have nine family members attending NPS.

As a school board member, I will continue to work diligently to support the administrators and teachers in our goals to decrease the dropout rate, address student needs and issues that affect their education, and advocate for children and families.

Over the past year, a strategic plan was developed that the board and staff, with dedication and support from the community and local organizations, continue to implement. Areas that are being addressed are balanced and relevant curriculum, proficiency on state tests, making families feel welcome in the school, professional development for staff, and secure funding. I hope to help accomplish the goals outlined.

2) What do you see as the most positive area or element within our district? What area or elements need the most improvement?

The children of our community are precious; one of the most important local values is love for children. Each student matters and should be treated with respect. The backgrounds and traditions of families and the community need to be recognized so that the students look at themselves with pride.

Maximum learning takes place when students' programs are relevant and meaningful to them. Teaching and learning should be based on students' individual strengths and needs.

We need to work on making sure that each child feels secure in the school and in the classroom. We need to make sure that each student feels like he or she belongs and that all families feel like the school belongs to them. We need to make sure that each child feels a sense of achievement. We need to make sure that students relate school to their families. We need to make sure that student learning is related to the community and the local environment. Achievement and graduation will be the result and these are the areas that need improvement.

opinions in the community, what can the board do to help heal the rift that occurred and reassure the public that they are being heard?

The devastating effects of the words and actions of last year are still being felt by many people. I will demonstrate and support forthcoming, upfront, positive and honest actions on the part of the board and the administration. Every member of the board must remember that there is value in every viewpoint and that no issue is black and white. We must speak and act in ways that demonstrate this.

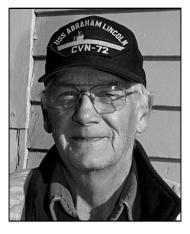

I will continue to abide by the values of respect for others, cooperation, humility and hard work. I will work, individually and as a member of the board, toward a cooperative relationship among the community, the board and the staff with a focus on actions and outcomes based on the needs of the students.

I would like to see everyone work together to improve education for all children in Nome.

Joe Lyon (challenger)

1) Why should voters elect you? What do you hope to accomplish as a school board member?

My family and I have lived in Nome since 1975. Many Nome citizens know I've worked at various jobs in this community. Any job that I have ever worked has been with the drive to do the best I can. If elected, I will do my very best. I want those who voted for me to always be glad they did. I hope to bring unity and balance to the Nome school board.

Personal agendas have no place there. The school board must be a service to all our students and parents.

2) What do you see as the most positive area or element within our district? What area or elements need the most improvement?

The most positive element in our district, to me, is this. We are a very diverse community. We get along. We help our neighbors when they need help. We watch out for other people's children to keep them safe. This community is so giving when it comes to supporting our students and teams, both financially and morally. Even if it's not a first-place finish, we're still proud and we say, "you did your best, and that's all we ask!" The area I would like to see an improvement in is a sense of nationalism. What happened to the Pledge of Allegiance? Why can't the students sing the traditional Christmas songs? I would love to see an elementary and high school choir again in the schools.

3) Nome Public Schools has come through a period of turmoil with turnover in both the administrative and board ranks. Realizing there will always be differences of opinions in the community, what can the board do to help heal the rift that occurred and reassure the public that they are being heard?

In a nutshell, what occurred with the school board should never have happened. Rules are in place to keep this kind of thing from ever happening. Now, to reassure that public and to gain trust towards the school board members, all the rules and policies must be followed to the letter. The public must be listened to and given an opportunity to have their say. They speak, we listen. Debate the issues/concerns and come to a consensus. Not everyone will be pleased with the outcome, but at least they should know we did our best to resolve an issue.

Thank you, and I would appreciate your vote.

Recalled baby formula found in Nome

Powdered infant formula that is subject to a national recall by the manufacturer has been found in Nome, according to the state Department of Health and Human Services.

According to the department, some of the state-purchased formula for the Women, Infants and Children program at local clinics in Nome and Bethel were part of the recall. On Sept. 22, Abbott Laboratories issued a voluntary recall for some of its Similac powder infant formula products. Abbott is conducting a voluntary recall of the formula because of the possibility that the product contains a small common beetle.

The products affected by the recall were identified by lot numbers on the bottom of the cans. According to the state, only cans of small powder WIC products with the letters "RB" in the lot code are affected by the recall.

The United States Food and Drug Administration said it determined that while the formula containing beetles and/or beetle larvae poses no immediate health risk, there is a possibility that infants who consume the tainted formula could experience symptoms gastrointestinal discomfort.

Efforts to contact the Norton

Sound Health Corp. WIC department were unsuccessful as of press time.

Complete information on the recall, including all affected lot numavailable bers. is www.similac.com/recall. Information from the WIC program on the recall and how to return or exchange the formula is available by following the links regarding the tainted formula at http://health.hss.state.ak.us.

According to Similac, the problem was found to have occurred in one area of a single manufacturing plant. The recall concerns the powdered product offered in plastic containers and product sold in 8-ounce, 12.4-ounce and 12.9-ounce cans. The company has a 24-hour toll-free number, (888) 376-2054, to call for information on the return process. The recall affects up to 5 million powder formulas sold in the United States, Guam and some Caribbean countries. The recall does not affect any liquid products.

Schmidt runs away with girls win, boys nab regional title

By Tyler Rhodes

Battling high winds and runners from nearly 20 teams, in pretty short order Rosa Schmidt found herself in a familiar position at Saturday's regional cross country meet in Nome—alone and in the lead.

With a cushion of more than a minute and a half between her and runner-up Jerrilyn Cleveland of Shungnak, Schmidt took the regional title and maintained her perfect season in races outside of Anchorage. Schmidt, a freshman, clocked a time of 23 minutes, 14 seconds, lopping nearly two minutes off her initial performance on the course in late August. As regional champ, Schmidt earns her way into the state meet this weekend in Anchorage.

Nome's Hannah Tozier will also be competing at state at Bartlett High School after placing 10th in the regional race at home. Finishing in 27:01, Tozier was more than five minutes ahead of her previous time on the course. To make it to state, a runner must either be part of a winning team or place in the top 15 in-

On the boys' side, it was White Mountain's Asa Bergamaschi who took an early lead and held it until the end. Bergamaschi finished in 19:36, followed by Barrow's Sam George at 19:55. Nome's Jeremiah Johnson was the first Nanook to cross the line, placing third overall at helped seal the team title for White Mountain in the small schools division, with a score of 11 points, beating out Buckland, 19; Kiana, 24; Unalakleet, 38; and Shishmaref, 48. For the large schools, Nome dominated the standings, placing its five scoring runners in the top 11. Nome scored 28, followed by Kotzebue with 61 and Barrow with 80. Nome's varsity squad of seven will compete at Bartlett Saturday in the state meet.

Nome's Johnson led a pack of Nanooks through the finish chute with Sam Schmidt, Emerson Conger and Tim Sullivan placing fourth through sixth. Nathan Blandford capped Nome's scoring contingent with his 11th place finish. Jens Irelan placed 14th and Junyor Erikson was 20th to wrap up the Nanooks' performance on their home course. Two of Nome's runners who have put in strong varsity performances all season, Tim Schmidt and Dion Williams, were sidelined from the regional competition due to illness.

For the girls, Nome was unable to compete as a team since the Lady Nanooks only brought four runners to the line. Teams are required to field at least field five runners, and Nome has competed all season just a runner shy of a full team. Beth Herzner was the third Lady Nanook to cross the line, finishing in 19th. Caitlin Tozier summed up Nome's effort with a 23rd place effort, roughly in the middle of the pack.

For the large schools, Barrow took the girls' title with 23 points compared to Kotzebue's 32. Kiana topped the ranks for the smaller schools, scoring 13, followed by Point Hope, 21; Unalakleet, 23; Buckland, 25; and Gambell, 39.

Runners Saturday had to contend not only with the steep climb that starts approximately a mile into the race, but also with a stiff headwind. Runners looked either determined or miserable, or perhaps a mix of both, as they fought their way up the climb that rises above the high school on Anvil Mountain. The athletes, however, were treated to a long downhill and tailwind on the old Glacier Creek Road before hitting a series of trails to lead them back to the finish line at the high school.

Utility Board Seat D: Berda Willson

Berda Willson (unopposed) 1) Why should voters elect you? What do you hope to accomplish as a utility board member?

I believe my years of experience serving on the utility board and working for the utility, prior to retirement, prepare me to be an effective board member to represent the community. I am retired and live in Nome, and will work toward keeping the rates as low as possible while providing the most reliable service. În addition, I will advocate for expansion of services, both electric and water/sewer, and planning and implementation of cost-effective renewable energy.

2) What role can/should renewable energy play in Nome's power supply? If you feel it should, how does Nome go about developing it or encouraging its development?

Renewable energy should play an important role in Nome's power supply. There is thermal, natural gas, battery storage, solar, and other forms of renewable energy that may be feasible, and should be explored. The Nome Joint Utility continues to look at renewable energy options while striving to provide reliable dieselgenerated power to its customers. Wind power appears to be the renewable energy of choice as demonstrated by the Banner Wind Farm. The problem is that wind power is only available when the wind is blowing, unless a solution is found to store the excess power, possibly in a battery. We cannot forget that diesel generation must be available immediately if the wind decreases or quits.

Natural gas is available in our area and could be a source of energy for generating electricity and heating; the new generators that the utility purchased can be converted to burn natural gas. I would insist that the renewable energy source is cost effective and would not be installed without assurance that it really will provide reliable and cheaper electricity to the consumer. I would like to see the State of Alaska step up with an energy plan and implementation funds that includes all of Alaska. I would also like to see the U.S. government get serious in converting to renewable and other energy sources here in America, and stop depending on foreign oil. Unless there is a change, the big oil companies will continue to make record profits and we will continue to pay high prices.

3) What are the top three issues facing the utility board?

The high cost of diesel fuel is No. 1, the need for affordable and reliable renewable energy is No. 2, and expansion of electric and water/sewer services is No. 3. There is a fixed cost of doing business that could be spread over a larger customer base if services were expanded, resulting in a lower fixed cost for all consumers.

Saying it Sincerely

Are Your Prayers Effective? By Pastor Mike Christian, River of Life Assembly of God for the Nome Ministerial Association

"The prayer of a righteous man is powerful and effective" - James 5:16b -

The Word of God tells us that, "the prayer of a righteous man is powerful and effective." I don't know about you, but if there is one thing I want when I pray, it is to know that my prayers are going to be answered. I want my prayers to be "Powerful and Effective!" If this is what you and I desire to see when we pray, then we must strive to the best of our ability (with God's help), to live a life of "Righteousness." To live a righteous life in the world we live in today may seem like impossibility, but it's not! When you or I give our life to Christ, we accept the fact that our sins are forgiven and brought under the blood of Jesus. Therefore, we also must accept the responsibility that comes with this new way of living we have entered into by becoming a follower and servant of our Lord Jesus Christ. We now have the privilege and honor of bringing glory and honor to our Lord by living each day according to his word. Our actions and our words are supposed to show those around us that we belong to Jesus, and that we are determined to live our lives each day for his glory. When we pray, we must believe that the Lord not only hears our prayers, but that he is going to answer our prayers. We must learn to pray "according to his will" just like Jesus prayed when he was in the Garden of Gethsemane just before his arrest and eventual death on the cross (Matthew 26:36-46).

Now I'll be one of the first ones to admit that saying it is sometimes easier than doing it, but that still doesn't mean that it's impossible. It simply requires a desire on our part to put forth the effort to walk the walk and not just talk the talk. Each day we should show the love of Jesus to those with whom we interact. Whether it's over a cup of coffee or a lunch meeting, the words we speak and the things we do should reflect the Lord we serve. We should also be reading and studying His Word so that we can learn how to be like Him more and more each day. This is part of living a life of righteousness.

My friends, it is my desire to see Jesus bless your and my life in every way possible. It is my desire to see our prayers answered and every one of our needs met. This is what he promised to do if we would do our part. In Matthew 6:33 Jesus tells us: "But seek first his kingdom and its righteousness and all these things will be given to you as well."

So, as we go before the Lord in prayer, may we be striving to live a life of righteousness every day. May our hearts be sincere and your motives pure when we ask our heavenly father to answer our prayers. May our prayers become "powerful and effective!"

Love and miss you Son, Brother, cousin, nephew and friend.

Why some people benefit from a gluten free diet

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Gluten has become a food substance of interest for people looking for ways to eat a healthy diet. Some have claimed that avoiding gluten gives them a higher quality of life.

The claims are varied and hard to prove. Many people, including celebrities and alternative healthcare advocates, maintain that people gain increased energy and more effortlessly lose weight when they avoid gluten in the diet. Proponents of the gluten-free movement tend to focus on gluten as if it were a not-to-be-trusted hidden ingredient added to processed foods similar to trans-fats or high-fructose corn syrup.

It is true that gluten, a natural protein found in wheat, barley, and rye grains, is found throughout the American diet in breads, cereals, baked goods, and processed foods where wheat gluten is used as a thickening agent.

However, the extent to which gluten is a cause of disease in the general population is probably quite low.

Most people lose weight and feel better when switching to a gluten-free diet because to do so requires a person to replace high-carbohydrate foods with vegetables and high-fiber grains other than wheat. It is likely that these same people would lose weight and feel better by simply increasing their intake of vegetables while decreasing their intake of simple carbohydrates.

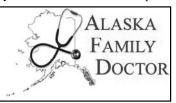

Medically speaking, gluten can cause serious disease in a small group of people who have a genetic condition of gluten intolerance called Celiac Sprue. A person with this disorder basically loses the lining of their small intestine if they eat any foods with gluten. This makes it hard to absorb nutrients including fats, vitamins, and proteins.

Patients with Celiac Sprue often suffer from gastrointestinal symptoms like stomach cramps, diarrhea, and malnutrition. The condition can also be associated with an intensely itchy rash called dermatitis herpetiformis, metabolic disorders like diabetes mellitus type I, or neurologic problems secondary to poor absorption of calcium.

A somewhat larger group of people may have a sensitivity or allergy, not merely to gluten, but to any of the proteins in wheat or similar grains. Unlike a gluten intolerance, protein allergies induce an immune response where the body goes into attack mode having mistaken the wheat protein for a bacteria, virus, or fungus.

Symptoms range from itchy eyes and hives to bronchospasm with wheezing and potentially anaphylactic shock.

A puzzling subset of this disorder only affects people if they exercise right after eating wheat-containing foods.

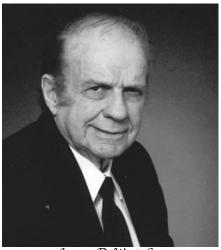

Other affected individuals develop a form of asthma, called baker's asthma, when breathing wheat or other flour dust.

The primary treatment for any medical disorder related to wheat ingestion is avoidance of wheat-containing products. Lowering the intake of gluten in the diet has become easier due to the current popularity of gluten-free products, but a true gluten-free diet requires significant forethought and may be entirely unnecessary. For example, a gluten-free diet will not help if symptoms are secondary to an unrelated intolerance of milk, nuts, or eggs.

For this reason, if you think you have a problem with gluten or wheat products, ask your doctor about simple tests to determine your specific risk of allergy or intolerance.

Before your visit, you may find it helpful to keep a food diary in which you record the specific foods you eat and the symptoms you experience after eating these foods. This diary will become an invaluable tool for you and your provider if together you decide to initiate a food elimination program.

Six blast through triathlon

A sunny but windy September 19 greeted the six individual participants in the Second Annual September Blast Triathlon. Sponsored by the high school swim team, participants swam 1,000 meters, ran six miles and biked six miles. The wind was a factor – both good and bad. During the bicycle portion, the wind was mostly against the riders. However there was one section where everyone reported that the wind, coupled with downhill terrain caused them to go so fast that their legs could not keep up with the speed of the pedals. Unfortunately, this section was rather short.

Thanks to the cross country team for having a nice three-mile trail that gave participants quite a variety: uphill, downhill, road running and off road run-investigate and shape policy issues that impact the residents of the north. One of the most rapidly changing issues in the Arctic is the climate, the sea ice and the loss thereof. With more areas of open seas in the summer, international shipping companies look to the Arctic Ocean, the Beaufort and Chukchi seas as well as the Bering Strait for shorter shipping routes. In order to deal with the unprecedented task to figure out how to address Arctic marine safety and marine environmental protection, the Institute issued a workshop report that builds on the Arctic Marine Shipping Assessment, a ground-breaking report published last year by the Arctic Council.

The most important issues identified in the so called AMSA report are to develop the polar code that would install mandatory rules for polar ship construction, design, operations and ice navigation competence. Also identified as crucial policy issues were Arctic Search and Rescue agreements to be in place by 2011 and to implement an Arctic observing network to support scientific research and marine operations.

In addition to Arctic marine safety, including both cargo and passenger vessels, the protection of the local people and the environment amed as a high priority. AMSA recommendations include that Arctic states should conduct surveys on marine use by indigenous communities and to develop effective communications with those far-flung coastal communities to include them in the economic boon that may materialize with increased shipping.

It also advocates for designated areas for environmental protection, protection from invasive species, oil spill prevention and to further study effects of ship noise and disturbances of marine mammals. The workshop involved scientists from UAF, several federal agencies, the US Coast Guard, Norwegian, Chinese, Canadian, Japanese and English researchers, as well as shipping companies like Crowley and Holland America Lines. Nome mayor Denise Michels was also a participant.

Native groups, fishermen seek to stop Pebble

By Mary Pemberton

AP - A Native leader and fishing groups traveled to the nation's capital last week to try and stop development of a huge copper and gold mine in southwest Alaska. The Pebble Mine is near some of the world's most productive wild salmon streams and is being readied for permitting beginning next year.

Tom Tilden, chief of the Curyung Tribal Council, said six tribes in the Bristol Bay area are seeking Washington's help because state officials refuse to hear their concerns. With permitting to begin as early as next year, the tribes are worried, Tilden said.

Alaska never saw a mine it didn't want to permit, Tilden said.

"It seems as though we always run into a roadblock when we talk to state officials," he said. "It seems as though every mine that has gone through the application process has been OK'd.'

Tilden was accompanied on the trip by officials with conservation group Trout Unlimited and two business groups, the Bristol Bay Re-Seafood Marketing Association and the Alaska Independent Fishermen's Marketing Association.

Former Alaska Senate President Rick Halford, a strong opponent of Pebble, also was part of the delegation that spent several days in Washington visiting the Environmental Protection Agency and stopping in at Alaska, Washington and Oregon's congressional offices. Those states were chosen for their connection to the Bristol Bay salmon fishery.

Trout Unlimited's Alaska program director Tim Bristol said the state's permitting process is focused not on denying permits but moving projects forward.

"The permitting project in Alaska does not allow you to say 'no", he

In a move that has the potential to stop the mine, the groups are urging the EPA to use its authority under Section 404(c) of the Clean Water Act to prohibit the discharge of dredged materials from the proposed

The law allows the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers to dispense permits for disposing of dredged mining materials. The law allows the EPA to veto those permits if it believes they will harm fisheries, wildlife, shellfish beds, recreational areas or municipal water supplies.

Tom Crafford, the Alaska Department of Natural Resources' large mine coordinator, said there have been mine projects in Alaska that have not survived the permitting process.

However, once a mine receives federal, state and local permits, it's a different story. It may receive violation notices and be ordered to make changes, but the state has never gone so far as to permanently stop a mine from operating.

"We have never shut a mine down," Crafford said Friday.

John Shively, chief executive of Pebble Limited Partnership, the mining group promoting Pebble, said it's unclear whether invoking 404(c) would put a halt to Pebble because that depends on what kinds of fill and what locations for disposal of dredge materials would be unacceptable.

The impact on Pebble wouldn't be known until the project is permitted, he said.

Shively said in nearly every other case where 404(c) was invoked the mine had already received permits. It has been used only 12 times since

Tilden said the message the group received in Washington is that it has to get more scientific data to support

The tribes have looked closely at the other cases.

'We felt very confident that this should be the 13th time that it should be invoked," he said.

Kensington gold mine opened

Public officials of the State of Alaska lauded the opening of the Kensington gold mine, run by Coeur D'Alene Mines, 45 miles northwest of Juneau. After numerous lawsuits dealing with a controversial method to dump mine tailings in Lower Slate Lake, the state of Alaska intervened to overturn a court decision that deemed dumping tailings in the lake illegal. However, the state took the issue to the Supreme Court which reversed the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals decision and reinstated the dumping permit. Alaska Attorney General Dan Sullivan said that the mine opening "demonstrates why the State of Alaska should not hesitate to intervene in cases that threaten our ability to develop our resources responsibly. Since last year, the Department of Law has fought in about a dozen cases involving resource development projects in Alaska that have been challenged

UA students face 5 percent tuition hike

The University of Alaska board of regents decided a five percent increase for the tuition for lower level courses beginning with the 2011/2012 semester. Confronted with student protests, they delayed action on a further five percent increase until November. The originally approved rate for 2011-2012 was a 5 percent increase for 100-200 level courses and a 10 percent increase for 300-400 level courses. Graduate tuition would not increase. That original board action was taken in September 2009 and will remain in effect. The Alaska university system has one of the lowest tuition rates in the United States. According to the Washington Higher Education Coordinating Board, resident undergraduate students in Alaska pay an average of $5,133 a year for tuition and fees. That's more than just six other states, and $2,830 less than the national average. The UA faces a budget deficit of $2.5 million. Tuition revenue makes up roughly 11 percent of the university's overall budget, which includes a mix of state and federal funds as well. State general funds make up about 45 percent of the UA system's overall budget; but the Alaska Legislature has made clear the university must begin relying less on the state treasury.

"It's business as usual until we move on with the next step," she said.

Bailie said NovaGold could not comment on whether or not it had received any offers for the mine. She said NovaGold did not have a specific timeline for completing a sale. "There is no firm deadline. It could take a matter of months to find a buyer and close the sale," she said.

NovaGold was facing a Nov. 1 deadline from the state to make a decision on the project which has sat in limbo since November 2008. The state asked that by that deadline NovaGold either signify that it would permanently close the mine, request an extension of the temporary closure period or reopen the mine.

"We do think that the project holds value in the right portfolio. It just doesn't fit in our portfolio anymore."

NovaGold idled the mine just before Thanksgiving 2008 right as Rock Creek was nearing the end of its start-up process to bring the mine into production. In the two subsequent years, the company has worked to maintain the facilities on site and to comply with state and federal environmental and safety regulations.

Bailie said the decision to sell solely concerns the Rock Creek project. When NovaGold acquired Alaska Gold Co., it also gained significant land holdings and gravel

FOR SALE-The Rock Creek Mine in the Snake River Valley just north of Nome is seen in September 2009. Mine owner NovaGold Resources announced Sept. 28 that it is seeking to sell the project. The potential sale would not include other NovaGold/Alaska Gold holdings in the area, including lands and the Big Hurrah project.

operations in and around Nome. Bailie said the firm would continue to sell and deal with those holdings, including the Big Hurrah project east of Nome, separate of Rock Creek. 'NovaGold has always been in business of selling off non-core assets," she said. In its second quarter report issued July 13, NovaGold reported earning $1 million to $3 million annually from the sale of sand, gravel and land, as well as royalties from placer gold production, largely from its land holdings around Nome.

Rock Creek represented NovaGold's attempt to transition from an exploration company to that of a producer. Many smaller mining firms specialize in finding commercialgrade metal deposits and then sell them off to larger companies to actually mine. NovaGold nearly got Rock Creek to production.

While Rock Creek has most of its infrastructure in place, it isn't exactly a turn-key operation. NovaGold cited a number of factors leading to its 2008 shutdown, including the tumultuous financial environment and equipment that did not function as planned. Specifically, the mine's crushing unit was not able to handle the clay-rich ore that would harden in the cold and jam up the machinery. Bailie did not have an estimate on how much money it would take to bring the mine into production.

The mine also faced a number of environmental challenges relating to sediment and runoff making its way into area streams. It also has faced a buildup of water behind its tailings dam which was not designed to primarily contain liquid. Those issues have largely been addressed over the last two years through water management projects and the addition of a water treatment plant and injection wells to pump water from behind the dam underground.

Bailie said NovaGold believes that the amount of work accomplished at the mine site coupled with record-high gold prices should make Rock Creek an attractive prospect for potential buyers. "We've made an incredible amount of progress," she said. Overall, Bailie said NovaGold has spent approximately $250 million on the Rock Creek project.

NovaGold has estimated that Rock Creek could produce 100,000 ounces of gold annually with probable reserves of 1/2 million ounces of gold. The firm budgeted $19.1 million for the project for 2010 and noted that it had spent $10.2 million as July 13.

Andersen advocated for a resolution in support of Ballot Measure 1 to increase the number of legislative districts in Alaska by adding four house districts and two senate districts. The council unanimously approved the resolution.

FY2010 budget amendments

The council unanimously approved ordinances to amend the city's FY2010 general fund municipal budget, capital projects fund budget, Port of Nome fund budget funds were carried over.

and construction capital projects fund budget following a second reading and public hearing for each budget.

Anderson raised questions about amendments to the general fund municipal budget. He noted that $724,000 was taken out of savings to balance the budget. He also noted that an equipment replacement fund of $530,000 had been amended to zero with the notation "Not necessary." Andersen asked whether the two figures are related. City Manager Josie Bahnke told Andersen she has no answer. She said the equipment replacement fund was budget, special revenue fund not used for that purpose and the "I want to know why," Andersen said. "I will find out," Bahnke replied.

Andersen asked for the concurrence of the council in his request for a list of everyone who owes the city sales taxes and property taxes, everyone who owes utility bills, how long the taxes and utility bills have been owed and what is being done to collect them.

Andersen asked Bahnke to obtain written information on the status of the Sixth Avenue pump construction and whether the pump is hooked up to the Recreation Center. He also requested that she provide him with answers to a number of additional questions including the following.

Is it true that a city street probably will be dug up shortly after it is paved? Is the Public Works crew spending too much time on port issues? Why are five-gallon buckets of waste being dumped in the port facility's restrooms when they should be taken to the sewage treatment plant?

Andersen indicated his questions were based on recent reports and meeting minutes of various city entities.

Executive session

A sale tax audit and Bahnke's employment contract were discussed in executive session immediately following the regular council meeting.

Council members present in addition to Andersen, Brown (who participated by teleconference), and Pomeranz were Jon Larson and Jim West Jr. Mary Knodel was absent and excused. This was the last council meeting for Larson, who chose not to run in the Oct. 5 municipal election. Other council members thanked him for his service and wished him the best.

the H1N1 virus, a second type-A influenza labeled as H3N2, and influenza B all in one shot. With the late emergence of H1N1 last year, a separate vaccine from the traditional flu shot had to be produced. Quantities of the H1N1 vaccine were limited in the region, initially requiring priority to be given to those who were most at risk of complications from the new strain of flu.

Residents of the region will have their first chance to get the flu shot for the season Oct. 7 in Nome and the villages served by Norton Sound Health Corp. The clinic will run from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. at Old St. Joe's Hall in Nome and from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m. in the village clinics. A separate clinic will be held the next day, Oct. 8, from 1 p.m. to 3 p.m. at the XYZ Senior Center for elders.

A second flu shot clinic will be held in Nome in conjunction with the health fair scheduled from Nov. 12 and 13 at the Nome Recreation Center. All the clinics are free to the public.

While Kilby said she is confident the supply in the region is ample to meet demand, a benefit of having an early clinic is the ability to order more vaccine from the state if needed. Outside of the special vaccine clinics, Kilby said those interested in receiving the flu shot can either contact Public Health Nursing in Nome or their village clinic for an appointment.

Kilby said most of the vaccine supply this year is in the form of a shot. "The state has found that the nasal spray has not been as accepted by the public as it thought," she said.

Kilby said the Centers for Disease Control is recommending this year that anyone 6 months or older receive the shot, a departure from the past when the CDC targeted its recommendation at more at-risk populations. She said the expanded recommendation is partly based on an effort to limit otherwise healthy people spreading the flu to more at-risk populations. "The change is an indication that they want to protect as much of the population as possible," Kilby said. "All of us have exposure to elders or young children in one way or the other.'

Kilby said Monday that she had not heard of any true influenza cases in the region yet this season, noting that the flu tends to hit here in late December or the first of the year.

Amarok, Tozier and Brennan voted on to school board; West, Stiles win council seats

By Tyler Rhodes

While Tuesday's municipal election featured a couple of close races, it appears from the unofficial vote count that Nome will be able to welcome clear-cut winners into office. All vote tallies were unofficial as of press time

In the three contested school board races on the ballot, Barb Amarok, Marie Tozier and Betsy Brennan won seats. In the two contested city council races. Jim West Jr. and Josie Stiles claimed wins. Jerald Brown retained his city council seat after running uncontested, as did Berda Willson and Fred Moody on the utility board.

In the school board race, Brennan edged Charles Pullock by 23 votes to win a seat back on the board. Brennan had served a term on the board before losing to Gloria Karmun in last fall's municipal vote. In another close race, Tozier finished 41 votes ahead of Jeri Ann Tomter for Seat A. Amarok had the most decisive win, garnering 187 votes more than challenger Joe Lyon.

Shortly after the results were announced at Old St. Joe's Hall Tuesday night, Amarok said she was pleased with the election process, noting she believed all the candidates were qualified. She places a priority in reducing the number of dropouts in the district. "We need to help these students succeed in school," she said. She also stressed the need to elevate students' achievement scores and the

Legislators, leaders hear from Nome educators

Sitting before a task force comprised of legislators and other decision-makers, Nome educators got a chance this week to both tout what is working and ask for help in addressing what could be improved in career preparation and higher education for Alaska's students.

The Legislative Task Force on Higher ucation and Career Readiness convened two Alaska Fairbanks Northwest Campus, Nome

Pioneer Igloo. Focusing on access to higher education and how to better prepare the state's students for careers, the task force previously convened in Anchorage and Fairbanks and plans future meetings in Sitka, Anchorage and Juneau.

On Monday morning the group heard from ee Haugen, director of the University of days of hearings and tours Monday at Nome's Public Schools Superintendent Jon Wehde and Nome-Beltz Principal Steve Gast, and Todd Hindman, principal and teacher at the Anvil City Science Academy charter school. The Nome-based education specialists gave overviews of their schools and programs, highlighting both successes and challenges.

Gast spoke of the importance of vocational lucation and how it has been pushed to the side nationwide as schools focus on standardized testing and scores to meet federal requirements under the No Child Left Behind Act. Gast noted that it is particularly important in rural areas like western Alaska. "[Career and technical] education is very critical to western Alaska. So many of our students stav here," he said.

Gast told the task force that students typically trend into three groups at high schools.

Guilty plea in baby son's death

Plea deal would send Teller man to prison for 10 years the death of his son, seven-monthold Harley Dickson, from the abuse of "Shaken Baby Syndrome" two years ago. The guilty plea to the lesser B felony charge means Lee will avoid going to trial on two counts of murder.

The court had previously blocked out seven or eight days on the calendar in September for a trial on the murder charges. However, the prosecution and defense have worked out a plea deal reducing Lee's two murder charges to negligent homicide to which he pleaded guilty on July 23, in exchange for a fixed sentence of 10 years. The setting of the sentence to come will take into consideration aggravating factors—the age of the child and that Lee and the victim were members of a household.

Lee was still in custody Monday. In bail hearings last month, the court rescinded an existing bail and release order on Sept. 14. Judge Ben Esch then set Lee's bail amount at $15,000 at a subsequent hearing Sept. 29, with the requirement that the court receive 24 hours notice of his release. At a bail hearing, a witness reported that Lee had spoken of getting drugs after his release and positioning himself on the side of the road with the intention to harm Alaska State Troopers, according to court documents. Prosecutors contended that Lee's release would pose a risk to the community.

The guilty plea cancelled the trial

Hi Everyone,

Well, here I sit on a beautiful day trying to get over a cold and doing the food order. I want to thank Wally for taking me to all the different, beautiful places. Thanks a lot, I really appreciate it. Wow—I wish I could show you all the places I've seen, it's so awesome out there.

I want to talk about prices. I have said, and will keep saying they are charging way too much for food that is healthy for us and the unhealthy food costs less. Now, that isn't right.

Consider the pack size on the amount of things you order nowadays - I remember (seems like not so long ago) when a full case was 48 cans and a half case was 24 cans. Now they say a full case is either 12 or 24 or something and the prices are something else, too.

Try to buy your kids some fresh fruit. Just for one banana it is over $1. For a gallon of milk (of which my kids could drink in one day) it cost $13.40 plus taxes at one of our

And they wonder why Americans are overweight. Well, yeah, it cost less to buy the junk food.

I would like to say I'm grateful for the vaporizer-it sure helps. But I will always swear by stinkweed. That stinkweed does wonders-I think it balances out the ying and yang within the body some how. I've had people who have had cancer tell me they used stinkweed and gotten better. Better if you start using it on people as babies so they don't mind the taste—they'll just say OK where is it?

Anyway, take care. Don't forget to go out and enjoy the beautiful fall

Stealth Surveys

It seems that everyone in the lower-48 wants to know how Alaskans will vote. I have received at least four different telephone surveys in the past two weeks. The most recent of which asked to talk with the youngest registered male in the household, which in my case is a Jack Russell terrier who would say anything for a Milkbone and lies like a

What's so interesting is that the pollsters can't even pronounce Murkowski, Parnell, or Berkowitz. (The poll must have been outsourced to New Jersey or India.) They try to slant the responses to favor a certain candidate and put the others in a bad light. One question was, "If you knew Miller was a graduate of a fine upstanding lvy League school, would you vote for him?" They go on to make him out to be another Mother Theresa. Then they go on to ask questions that make Murkowski and McAdams sound like the antichrist and his evil twin. Surely this type of survey can influence an impressionable young male and beyond a doubt does not yield unbiased results. This brings to light how stealth organizations try to manipulate the American voter. If a lie or half-truth is repeated often enough people will think it is true. After all, the truth is so limiting. What is scary is that not every voter can see through this obfuscation.

Too many of us don't know how to be objective and think for ourselves. We are at the mercy of billionaires who place their own self-interests ahead of the best interests of the nation. They create and hide behind their own shell groups that fund the Tea Party and hope that we are too ignorant to know we have been hoodwinked. - N.L.M.-

September in Nome — a tale of two months

From the National Weather Service

OPINION

September 2010 presented really two different scenarios. There was the warm and wet beginning through the 18th, and the cooler and drier end from the 19th to the 30th. Nome was actually headed for its warmest September ever, primarily due to the cloudy and rainy conditions of the first three weeks. This kept the maximum and minimum temps very close. So, while there were no record maximum temperatures set, the average temperature remained quite warm. The cooler and drier conditions at the month's end led to six days of below-freezing temperatures under mostly clear skies. This dropped the average temperature from first to 10th in the standings. This left 1929 and 1997 as the cochamps with 48.3°F, while 2010 came in at 46.5°F.

Nome received 2.09 inches of rain in September, which was well above the 0.97 inches that fell in 2009. However, this year's amount did not even crack the top 50 for precipitation in September. The rainiest day of the month was Sept. 7 when 0.78 inches fell. September was also a snow-free month for the sixth time since 2000. Precipitation fell on 19 of the 30 days.

As for temperatures and winds September, the high of 60 occurred on Sept. 19 and the low of 22 occurred last on the 30th. The windiest day on average was the sixth with 16.6 mph and the gustiest wind was northeast at 32 mph on the 25th.

The climate prediction center expects near normal temperatures and precipitation for October, so expect the first snow of the year sometime soon. Snow occurred on Oct. 1 last year and the latest occurrence was Oct. 31 in 2007.

Alaska news briefs

Compiled by Diana Haecker Election campaigns heat up

The mid-term elections this year are heating up as advertising campaigns are bombarding Alaska voters in full swing. Since the primaries, the race for the U.S. Senate seat continues to generate the most news coverage, although a gubernatorial race is also on between Republican incumbent Sean Parnell - who inherited the seat from Sarah Palin when she quit in 2008 - and Democrat Ethan Berkowitz. The California-based Tea Party Express continues to support Murkowski's Republican rival, Joe Miller. According to the Associated Press, the Tea Party Express has pledged to do whatever it takes to beat Murkowski in November - including spending $100,000 or more on print and broadcast ads and direct mail. Meanwhile the Democrats nominee Scott McAdams raised more than $650,000 since the primary election and started to run his ad campaigns looking for a tie to look "senatorial." McAdams said that half of the contributions were from Alaskans and 90 percent were under $200.

Another report last week brought to light that Joe Miller has not filed mandatory financial disclosure with the U.S. Senate Committee on Ethics. Candidates are supposed to file within 30 days of spending or raising $5,000 on their campaign. Miller filed for candidacy in April. His office said the failing to file the paperwork was a "simple oversight." The Anchorage Daily News also reported that Miller and his wife applied for low income fishing and hunting licenses in 1995, paying instead of $55 the low-income fee of $5. At the time, the newspaper writes, Miller graduated from Yale Law School in May 1995, and flew between Connecticut and Alaska several times that semester. A month after graduating he began a $70,000-a-year job at an Anchorage law firm. Miller's platform is to curb the role of the government and government spending, speaking up against federal funding of social security and education. Last Sunday marked the end of voter registration and the state Division of Elections website says that 5,842 more Alaskans have registered to vote in the general election than were signed up for the primary. According to the division's numbers the biggest numbers of additional voters came in the undeclared category. The Republican Party added 2,672 more voters than it had heading into the August primary. Democrats lost 83.

Feds propose to designate ANWR as wilderness

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is considering designating the entire Arctic National Wildlife Refuge as a wilderness area. Three sections of the refuge are not considered wilderness areas, including the coastal plain that contains an estimated 11 billion barrels of recoverable oil. The agency plans to conduct three wilderness reviews this winter including the chance that the coastal plain of the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge would receive a permanent wilderness designation.

Senators Lisa Murkowski and Mark Begich did not receive this news well. Murkowski said that this would be a blatant political move by the [Obama] administration that violates the promise of no more administrative wilderness designations in Alaska. Murkowski said the agency lacks the authority to conduct wilderness reviews in Alaska without the express consent of Congress.

A wilderness designation of ANWR would prohibit drilling for oil and gas in the coastal plain. Democrat Mark Begich sent out letter to all 59 Democratic members of the U.S. Senate, saying that the 16 billion barrels of oil believed to be beneath the Arctic Refuge should be part of a national energy plan. Alaska governor Sean Parnell also said he opposes the plan or wilderness review process that would encumber the potential for oil and gas development in ANWR. ANWR was established Dec. 6, 1960, in the administration of President Eisenhower.

Alaska women suffer high rate of domestic violence

The University of Alaska Justice Center found in a study on sexual assault and domestic violence that half of the 871 surveyed women had been a victim of DV. One in eight had been victimized within the past year. The study revealed that nearly 59 percent of the women had experienced physical violence or threats of it and almost 27 percent said that in their lifetime, they had experienced unwanted sex when they were drunk or otherwise unable to consent.

Alaska Provisions Included in Coast Guard Bill

Last week, Congress passed the reauthorization for the US Coast Guard. Of interest for Alaska, the bill includes safe oil transportation and enhancement of Alaska fisheries. Congress OK'd financing the Coast Guard with operational funding at almost $7 billion and set active duty strength at 47,000 guardsmen and women. The bill includes provisions to modernize the service, improve marine safety and port security and strengthen oil spill prevention.

The bill also amends the American Fisheries Act to allow Bering Sea Pollock fishermen to modernize the fleet. Of importance for the Arctic, Beaufort and Chukchi seas, the bill allows to temporarily bring in foreign anchor handler vessels for Arctic oil exploration while emergency tow vessels are being sailed under the American flag. The bill also implements recommendations of the Arctic Marine Shipping Assessment regarding navigational aids, spill response and search and rescue capabilities and calls for an analysis of future U.S. icebreaker needs. The U.S. has a total of three icebreakers, two of them are in repair.

Crowley to home port two new barges in Nome

Come next spring, Nome should expect to welcome two new residents to town.

Marine and fuel service company Crowley announced Sept. 30 that it will home-port two new double-hulled barges in Nome starting next year. The new barges will be used to deliver fuel and cargo to western Alaska communities and are designed to operate in shallow draft and perform beach landings. Crowley's Vice President of Alaska Operations, Craig Tornga, said the company currently has no barges based out of Nome, noting the new double-hulled vessels will be the first.

The two new ships will measure 165 feet wind and 52 feet wide, will be able to achieve a fourfoot draft while loaded with approximately 90,000 gallons of product and can carry a total of 272,270 gallons. The barges can be loaded by a portable bow ramp and fixed crane, and can accommodate deck loading of 3,000 pounds per square foot.

The addition of the new barges will bring the number of double-hulled barges Crowley operates to three. The firm built its first such vessel in 2005. Crowley said there is no state or federal requirement that double hulls be used for barges under 5,000 tons, but opted for the design out of concern for the environment.

The barges, named DBL 165-1 and DBL 165-2, are slated to be delivered to Crowley in April and May 2011. The boats are being built by Dakota Creek Industries in Anacortes, Wash. Crowley's Jensen Maritime is providing engineering support to the shipyard for the and came after a year or so of motions and court proceedings to get the indictment dismissed following Lee's arrest when a grand jury handed up the indictment on July 17, 2008. That indictment was sealed while Troopers went to Teller to take Lee into custody, as other witnesses had said Lee said he would shoot Troopers.

The indictment charged Lee on murder in the first degree and murder in the second degree in incidents "on or between" June 8 to Oct. 11 2008, according to court documents, that resulted in the baby's death Oct. 13, 2008. The indictment followed a nine months' investigation by law enforcement.

According to the indictment, Lee "knowingly engaged in conduct directed towards a child under 16 and with criminal negligence inflicted serious injury on the child by at least two separate acts, and one of the acts resulted in the death of the child."

Shaken Baby Syndrome is a form of child abuse where the abuser violently shakes a baby or small child creating a whiplash motion causing acceleration-deceleration injuries that can lead to death or severe brain injuries.

In mid-February 2009, Esch denied a third motion by Lee to get the indictment dismissed.

This motion dealt with an investigator not enumerating to the grand iury all the interviews of Lee following the death. Lee said the omission of the interview robbed him of exculpatory information. Exculpatory describes evidence that tends to justify or exonerate an accused person's actions and tends to show that they had a lack of criminal intent.

According to court documents, Troopers interviewed Lee on two occasions (Troopers Sears and Bucknall) and so did an Anchorage Police Department officer, Patrick Roberts. The grand jury heard the AST interviews, but Mark Granda, AST investigator, did not mention the interview with Roberts. In his motion for dismissal, Lee based his motion on the alleged failure to present exculpatory information to the grand jury or because Granda made a material misstatement to the grand jury.

Because of these alleged failures, according to court documents filed by Lee, the grand jury was left with the impression that they had all the evidence Lee was willing to provide to medical and police personnel, that Lee's consistent denial from the day Harley Dickson entered the hospital to eight months later of any involvement in the baby's death was not provided the grand jury. The state has argued that all three interviews produced the same, except that in one interview Lee denied drinking.

Granda testified that Lee was interviewed in Anchorage after the baby's medivac flight and then subsequently "here [Nome] in July."

A grand juror then asked, "but there was no additional information provided, is that correct, Trooper?"

The witness said that was correct. In other cases, Esch noted in his denial, it has been established that a prosecutor has a duty as the grand jury's legal advisor, to present exculpatory evidence to a grand jury, to aid the grand jury in exercising its responsibility to seek out exculpatory evidence if such evidence exists.

In the denial, Esch said that the omitted exculpatory evidence here is not evidence of a nature that tends, in and of itself, to negate his guilt. The omitted evidence was merely the fact that defendant Lee gave another statement to APD before he gave a statement in Anchorage to Trooper Bucknall.

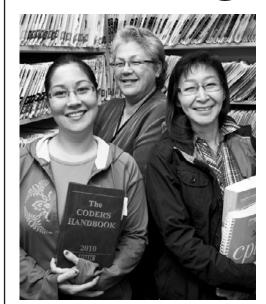

"The statement give to Officer Roberts was consistent with Lee's statements to Trooper Sears or Investigator Bucknall. [Lee] stated that he found the child in its bed sometime after 11 p.m. in distress with a white material coming out of its mouth and/or nose," Esch wrote in the denial of Lee's motion to dismiss the indictment. "The child was limp, he picked it up, he called for help and attempted to provide respiratory assistance until the health aide(s) arrived.

There was nothing in the statement to Roberts [statement unknown to grand jury] that tended, in and of itself, to negate guilt in any fashion differently than the statements to Bucknall or Sears. The prosecutor does not violate the duty to present exculpatory evidence if the omitted evidence is cumulative." Therefore, Second District Court Judge Ben Esch dismissed Lee's motion asking for dismissal of the grand jury's indictment.

In a prior motion, Lee asked for a dismissal because he said some testimony heard by the grand jury had been hearsay—a recorded interview with the babe's mother, Tammy Dickson - now deceased.

Bering Straits announces record revenues

Largely buoyed by its involvement in government contracting, Bering Straits Native Corp. announced Oct. 1 that it pulled in record revenues of more than $190.3 million for the fiscal year that ended March 31. The regional Alaska Native corporation reported a net income of $6.6 million and declared a record dividend to shareholders of $2.35 a share.

"During the past several years, we have seen significant growth in operations," BSNC Board Chairman Henry Ivanoff Sr. said in a press release issued by the corporation. "This growth provides benefits for our shareholders through increased training and employment opportunities, scholarships and dividends.

Bering Straits, which has offices in Nome and Anchorage, participates in the federal Small Business Administrations preferential contracting program that gives it access to no-bid contracts. Known as the 8(a) program, the contracting has allowed the Native corporation to come back from near financial ruin to posting revenues in the hundreds of millions of dollars. During BSNC President Tim Towarak's tenure since August 2000, revenues have grown from $9 million to today's $190.3 million. "Government contract work comprises a significant portion of BSNC revenues, and we can thank the efforts of the Anchorage office staff who have worked to implement the board's decision to expand BSNC's involvement in federal contracts through the Small Business Administration's 8(a) program," BSNC Chief Executive Officer

Gail Schubert said.

Through the 8(a) program, Bering Straits has started firms to provide everything from aerospace engineering to armed security for federal clients. The corporation also has business interests in the region, operating the Aurora Inn, sand and gravel operations, apartment buildings and construction and mining serv-

The company is slated to hold its annual shareholders meeting in Anchorage Oct. 9.

Some Native corporations may limit contracting

AP - Some Native corporations are proposing limits on contracts with the federal government to head off more drastic reforms being suggested in Congress. "To reform it is to save it," said Cook Inlet Region CEO Margie Brown.

The Anchorage Daily News reports Native firms have won hundreds of millions of dollars in contracts through the Small Business Administration 8(a) program, which aims to help small disadvantaged firms.

Federal audits have been critical of no-bid contracts. The SBA has already proposed rules to tighten oversight by the end of the year.

A top SBA official told one Alaska Native executive at a recent hearing that that the 8(a) program is "in fact a business development program. It's not a contracting program.

The official, Joe Loddo, stressed that thousands of companies have joined the 8(a) program, but few have graduated from it in the last several years. That makes it hard to defend the program from attacks, and it's why some rules need to change, he said.

A nine-point reform package recently announced by Anchoragebased Cook Inlet Region Inc., Fairbanks-based Doyon Limited and Barrow-based Arctic Slope Regional Corp. echoes many of the federal agency's proposed changes. It includes a requirement that Native 8(a) contractors disclose annually how they have benefited shareholders and tribal members. Cook, Doyon and Arctic Slope propose capping contracts at $100 million. Will Anderson, chief executive of Koniag Inc., said one reason the cap is troubling for other Native firms is that it could restrict growth for corporations with a large number of shareholders. He said his corporation, for example, needs to expand its business operations to provide a more meaningful dividend to its 3,700 shareholders who have roots in the Kodiak region.

The Native American Contractors Association, a trade group that represents some but not all Alaska Native, Lower 48 tribal and Native Hawaiian 8(a) contractors, attacked the $100 million cap as arbitrary.

The association said the proposal opens the door to continued downward pressure on contract awards.

Berkowitz brings the campaign through Nome

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Ethan Berkowitz made a whirlwind tour of Nome Sept. 29, meeting with regional organizations and hosting a fundraiser during his one-day stop.

Between meetings with the Bering Straits Leadership Team and a tour of the new Norton Sound Regional Hospital being built in Nome, Berkowitz made a quick stop at The Nome Nugget for an interview. During his visit, the candidate offered his views on the challenges and issues facing rural Alaska as well as his vision for the state as a whole.

In his travels through rural Alaska, Berkowitz said he has consistently heard residents voice concerns over the high cost of energy, the "erratic quality of education," the lack of social services and the need for infrastructure. Berkowitz said the high cost of energy continues to have a crippling effect on the economy and daily life of people living off the road system.

Berkowitz criticized past practices such as the $1,200 "energy rebate" the state handed out to nearly every Alaska resident in 2008 as a response to spiking petroleum prices. Instead, he advocated for more investment in projects in communities that could locally combat high energy prices. "Had we taken that money, we could have done major energy changes. For about $2 million per village, you can get high-quality wind projects in many of the villages," he said. "If you're escaping the crushing burden of $8 a gallon heating oil, you're keeping money in communities and keeping jobs there." Berkowitz, a former minority leader in the Alaska House of Representatives, was no longer in the Legislature when the vote was taken to distribute the funds.

Berkowitz, who is running with Diane Benson against current Republican Gov. Sean Parnell and tion, said there has been much talk but little action in addressing energy issues in the Bush. "We've got to do things, we've got studies sitting all over the place sitting all over the shelves," he said. "If you're concerned about the high cost of energy, let's start developing energy projects in the communities. If you're concerned about preschool, start funding Head Start."

Citing his experience in trying to develop wind energy projects in some communities in the region, he said too often projects lie dormant or never are realized while communities or entities wait for government or grant funding. The candidate did acknowledge challenges to small-scale, independent projects in the face of cumbersome and unclear regulatory rules. "We don't know how to sell power back into the grid because of the rules are so unclear," he said.

In regard to energy issues with a more statewide view, Berkowitz touted his plan to allow Alaskans the ability to invest their Permanent Fund Dividends in the development of a natural gas pipeline. The candidate said the plan would be projectneutral, meaning it would apply if a pipeline were built in state or to the Lower 48. Berkowitz, who said he favors an in-state project, said he has received positive feedback for the ownership idea. "People love the idea that they can own a piece of the pipe," he said. "One of the problems that exists right now is people don't feel like they have a say in the future. This at least gives them a chance to have a stake.'

Berkowitz also discussed his take on the state's system for gaining revenue off resource extraction in the state. He said he promotes dumping the state's severance tax and solely utilizing a royalty system (the state currently utilizes both a severance alties should be decided project by project and fuel by fuel, meaning a different rate be used for oil and gas. Berkowitz said the system would be contractual with the royalties negotiated between the state and companies for each project.

On other topics on note in the region, Berkowitz seemed to pan a proposal to connect Nome to the state's highway system, questioning where the funding would come for such as projects of this dimension, when you have good business sense, tell me how it's going to get funded," he said. "The laws of gravity exist in terms of budgets as well."

Berkowitz said he has been a longtime supporter of a constitutional amendment that would give a rural preference to subsistence. "There's almost a higher calling that the customary and traditional ways of life be supported," he said. "And to those who live the subsistence lifestyle has resulted in increased federal presence in Alaska.'

Berkowitz also noted the need for more scientific research and for seeking out traditional knowledge on the effects of a warming Arctic and what that means for resource extraction, shipping and fishing in the region. "It will touch our lives in innumerable ways," he said of the changing

Kawerak fisheries biologist describes 2010 northern Bering Sea trawl survey

By Laurie McNicholas

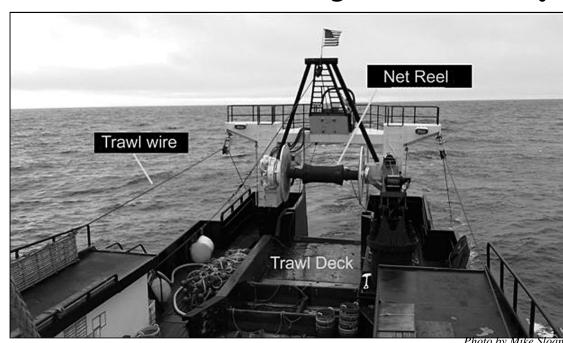

Last August Mike Sloan, Kawerak's fisheries biologist, participated in the first bottom-trawl survey of the northern Bering Sea conducted by the National Marine Fisheries Service since 1991. Sloan served as a guest observer with five NMFS scientists aboard the F/V Aldebaran, which surveyed an area south of St. Lawrence Island. The vessel also carried five crewmembers.

Two other vessels took part in the research project: The F/V Pacific Knight, which covered the western Bering Sea and some survey stations along the International Dateline, and the F/V Vesteraalen, which surveyed Norton Sound and the area north of St. Lawrence Island up through Bering Strait. Sloan said the Aldebaran was scheduled to cover Norton Sound and north of St. Lawrence Island, but spent five days in Bristol Bay completing unfinished survey work due to earlier mechanical problems.

The project is part of an effort to develop a research plan for the Northern Bering Sea Research Area, which was established and closed to SHAB—are placed in one basket for further sorting and sampling.

'After sorting the sample by species, the scientists sex and measure all fish species, collect otoliths (fish ear bones), and stomach samples," Sloan explained. "Fish otoliths are used to determine age, and they have growth rings similar to those found in trees. Stomachs are collected and preserved in a Formalin solution, and these samples will be processed after the survey to determine diet. Crab species were sexed and measured, and scientists also collected eggs for reproductive studies. Skates were tagged and returned to the ocean alive to determine migratory patterns."

The survey collects oceanographic data such as temperature, salinity and luminosity at trawl stations. "Sensors mounted on the trawl net provide information on gear performance that is later used to standardize data collected," Sloan added. "The survey also collects advanced sonar data for use in assessing pelagic (midwater) stocks such as pollock."

commercial fishing in 2008, as recommended by the North Pacific Fisheries Management Council in 2007. The NBRSA boundaries encompass the Bering Sea from the Nelson Island area to Bering Strait.

The council closed the area to bottom-trawling until a research plan is created to identify future protection measures needed for sea mammals, crab species, endangered or threatened species and subsistence resources in the area.

Little commercial fishing has been conducted in the NBRSA, but research indicates that several dozen species of shellfish and fish, including flatfish targeted by bottom-trawlers are extending their range northward under a warming climate.

Last week as Sloan prepared a report with photos from the survey to present to Kawerak's Natural Resources Committee, he discussed some of his observations aboard the Aldebaran in an interview with The Nome Nugget. "We saw a ton of small crabs," he noted. "About 350,000 opilio were caught in the trawl net in 45 stations. The biggest carapace we saw was 2.5 inches. The carapace needs to be around 5 inches to be legal to harvest. During two weeks in the NBSRA, we took 107 halibut and three chums. A total of seven chums were taken by all three boats.'

Other species hauled aboard in the trawl net included yellowfin sole, pollock, cod, starfish, jellyfish, sea squirts (tunicates), snails, hermit crabs and some invertebrate species the scientists did not recognize and sent to a NMFS lab for identification. "The survey found some large yellowfin sole in the southern NBSRA, and the fishing industry has been pushing to expand the commercial flatfish fishery into this region," Sloan said.

He described the process for handling and examining a sample when it is hauled aboard in the trawl net. "They tie off the cod end as close as possible to the catch, winch it up off the deck and get the whole weight of the sample with a scale built into the crane hook. For larger samples, the catch may be divided before being placed on the sorting table, while the entire catch is always sampled for halibut, crab and skates.

"Opilio crab, yellowfin sole, saffron cod, starfish and other major species are all sorted into separate baskets," Sloan continued. "The remaining sample—snails, hermit crabs and assorted biologicals called Sloan said the area surveyed by the Aldebaran was divided into 20-mile grids, each with a station from which bottom trawl samples were taken. "They normally drag within a few hundred yards of where they dragged before," he said. "They are virtually on top of old surveys. They drag a 50 foot wide trawl net at 3 knots; 1.5 nautical miles per drag. It's all about consistency." He said NMFS uses the same type of trawl gear from one survey to the next.

This year's NBRSA survey was an extension of the standardized annual bottom-trawl survey that NMFS has conducted on the eastern Bering Sea shelf since 1982. "Only three hundredths of one percent of the whole Bering Sea, including the eastern Bering Sea, Gulf of Alaska and northern Bering Sea is surveyed," Sloan noted. "NMFS trawls only that much and extrapolates the data out to represent the whole area. Although the area trawled was relatively small, the habitat damage caused by the net was significant."

Sloan used Kawerak's new underwater video camera to document seafloor habitat in the survey area, and it also allowed scientists to view habitat in real time. The SplashCam costs about $6,000 and is capable of reaching the ocean floor anywhere in the Bering Strait region. "Waters of 120 feet to 150 feet were the deepest we encountered," Sloan said. "Near St. Lawrence Island the water was shallower, and they encouraged me to use the camera in daylight hours. I put the camera down near St. Lawrence Island before they set the gear, and that helped avoid hard (rocky) areas on the bottom.

"Kawerak's underwater video shows a diverse benthic habitat complete with soft corals, sponges, bryozoans, sea squirts, crabs, and mollusks," Sloan reports. "Kawerak will use the video footage to make a case for protecting critical marine habitat in our region."

Sloan brought extensive experience as a NMFS fisheries biologist to his role as guest observer aboard the Aldebaran. He began his career with NMFS in 1989 sampling fish at a South Carolina port. He worked from1991 through 1992 in Alaska as a fisheries observer for NMFS on a shoreside yellowfin sole boat, on a cod longliner and on the Northern Eagle catcher-processor observing a pollock harvest in the A (roe) season.

Sloan worked for five years as a fisheries manager monitoring harvests for NMFS. He spent three years in Juneau and two years running the Dutch Harbor field station. Then he moved to Nome where he worked for Kawerak, Nome Community Center and the Nugget, and met his wife, Marsha.

The couple moved to Maine in 2002 where they owned and operated a coffee shop and Mike worked as a NMFS fisheries observer in the Gulf of Maine. The Sloans returned to Nome in 2008. Marsha is Deputy Director of Nome Eskimo Community.

Future NBSRA trawl surveys

Sloan offers the following recommendations for future NBSRA bottom trawl surveys:

"(1) Develop less destructive survey methods for use in sensitive habitat, such as those using video cameras to assess rockfish habitat in the Gulf of Alaska. Trawl surveys destroy marine habitat even as they aspire to learn more about it.

"(2) Collect pH data to monitor ocean acidity. Ocean acidification is a huge recent concern. It affects the ability of shellfish to make shells and it affects the larval and egg stages of fish.

"(3) Process any edible fish caught during surveys and distribute them to food banks. NMFS may need additional people to gut and store the fish. In a survey, most fish are sampled and tossed back over the side dead. The current survey guidelines call for all catch to be discarded/wasted, and this is disrespectful of Alaska Native and subsistence culture.

"(4) Initiate government to government consultation with tribes in the NBSRA in advance of future bottom trawl surveys. NMFS has taken the position that trawl surveys are exempt from the requirement for consultation under the Magnuson-Stevens Act. NMFS has been mostly unresponsive to requests for consultation. They say there are no impacts from research, but this research is used for justifying the development of commercial fisheries and other management actions which affect our region's tribes."

A report on findings of the 2010 bottom-trawl survey in the NBSRA will be completed next spring, according to the project's Principal Investigator Bob Lauth, Alaska Fisheries Science.

HEY JOE, SHOULDN'T YOU CHECK WITH THE VOTERS BEFORE YOU ORDER THE DRAPES?

On Sept. 29, Joe Miller was in Washington, D.C., collecting money from the very insiders he likes to bash. Over the course of the evening, he sent a series of tweets thanking his Senate "colleagues" and chatting about buying furniture and finding a house.

Whoa, Joe. The election's not for another month. Maybe you should let Alaskans decide who's heading to Washington before ordering your name plaque.

Then, those tweets mysteriously disappeared from Joe's Twitter stream, but unfortunately for Joe, you can't take back something you already posted on the Internet.

Alaskans deserve better.

XC: Schmidt cracks top 10, Boys nab 9th at state

SPORTS

Nomeite Teddy Payenna cruises to third place running for Mount Edgecumbe

By Tyler Rhodes

Rosa Schmidt has an unfamiliar sight in front of her last weekend as she raced near Anchorage's Bartlett High School—other runners.

But not too many.

In the biggest race of the freshman runner's career, Schmidt ran her way to eighth place at the state meet in Anchorage Oct. 2. In all her races this season outside of Anchorage, Schmidt established an early lead and held it until the finish, often winning by more than a minute.

Schmidt covered the five-kilometer course in 20 minutes, 48 seconds, just on the heels of Monroe's Macala Fifield who clocked the exact same time. Kenny Lake's Kailey Wilson dominated the race, taking her third state title in a row with a time of 19:54. Nome's Hannah Tozier, the only other Nanook in the race, clocked a time of 25:05, placing 69th.

Emerson Conger led the Nanook effort on the boys' side, pacing 32nd at 18:48 with teammate Jeremiah Johnson close behind in 37th place at 18:57. Overall the Nanooks placed ninth out of the 12 schools that were able to bring full teams to the line. With only two runners in the race, Nome's girls were unable to compete as a team.

Both the boys' and girls' 1A-2A-3A races were claimed by Grace Christian, whose John Klein won the boys' race in a last-minute surge that put him across the line just ahead of Delta Junction's Andrey Ionashku. The third runner to cross the line was a familiar face to Nome fans, even though he was not in a Nanook jersey. Running for Mount Edgecumbe, Teddy Payenna clocked a 17:07 in his third-place effort. Payenna also placed third at the state meet last year when he was running for Nome.

Following Conger and Johnson for Nome's boys were Sam Schmidt in 60th place at 19:17, Tim Sullivan in 70th at 19:31, Junyor Erikson at 20:05 and Jens Irelan at 20:11. The Nanooks' seventh runner, Nathan Blandford, was sidelined from the race due to illness. Pneumonia and sickness took its toll on the team this year, keeping several runners from competing and training for the last few weeks of the season.

Are you getting a flu shot this year?

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Patients often ask if they should get a flu shot, but a clear recommendation is often difficult to make. There are many factors to consider because the benefit of the seasonal influenza vaccination is heavily dependent on an individual's age, health behaviors, and health problems.

Furthermore, like any vaccine, the difficulty in making a recommendation comes from a tension between the benefit of the vaccine for each individual, which turns out to be low, and the benefit for the entire community, which can be

The flu shot in kids provides a good example of this tension. A 2007 study in the journal Pediatrics found that 6897 children between the ages of two and five would need to be vaccinated to prevent one hospitalization for influenza related problems. A much lower number, 42, would need to be vaccinated to prevent one clinic visit for flu-like symptoms in this age group. Parents would be happy if their child were the one who avoided a visit to the hospital or clinic, but many parents struggle with whether the odds of preventing illness are worth the risks, though remote, of giving an annual vaccine to their child in order to protect everyone else's children.

Therefore the decision to be vaccinated remains a personal one, but the decision can affect an entire community due to what is termed "herd-immunity," which is the reduced risk of serious illness in high-risk groups by vaccinating the entire population or "herd."

Based largely on the idea of "herd-immunity," the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention now recommends the vaccine for nearly everyone.

The CDC receives their guidance from the US Advisory Committee on Immunization Practices. Earlier this year, the ACIP recommended an experiment of sorts: universal influenza vaccinations for all persons 6 months of age or older. Previously flu shots were only recommended for certain high risk groups including children, pregnant women, elders, health care workers, and people with a serious underlying illness

The new guidelines come in the wake of last year's H1N1 (swine flu) outbreak which highlighted the fact that most people in the United States may now fall into one of the many high-risks groups thought to benefit from the flu vaccine, including a new risk category, obesity.

But does the flu vaccine help prevent serious disease? Experts in public health say yes, but not directly.

For example, a large 2006 Cochran review reported that the flu vaccine in children under age two was no more effective than placebo. Influenza at this age can be very dangerous, but there is no data to suggest the vaccination affords any direct protection to young children.

Furthermore, according to a study of persons over age 65 published in the Archives of Internal Medicine in 2003, the efficacy of the flu vaccine diminishes with age and becomes essentially ineffective for elders age 75 or older.

This means the most important people to vaccinate are not the people at risk for getting the flu. Rather the most effective approach is likely to vaccinate otherwise healthy individuals at little risk of getting or suffering from influenza in order to protect those for whom the vaccination would provide little, if any, direct protec-

Doctor Gregory Poland, director of the Mayo Clinic's Vaccine Research Group and member of the ACIP panel refers to this concept as "cocooning," or protecting at-risk groups by surrounding them with vaccinated healthy individuals.

The concept of cocooning represents a transition in philosophy regarding the annual flu vaccine. The shot is no longer thought of as an individual treatment, but rather as a public health initiative.

But critics say it is unclear whether mass flu vaccinations actually protect the population. Tom Jefferson, an epidemiologist with the well-respected Cochrane Collaboration, says that unlike proven vaccination programs for illnesses like measles, diphtheria, or tetanus, when it comes to the flu vaccine experts do not really know what protection, if any, the vaccine offers. When it comes to preventing the spread of influenza, Jefferson recommends proven public health measures like hand washing, wearing gloves, and wearing masks.

Until there is solid data from highquality research regarding the efficacy of the flu shot, doctors will only be able to give guidance on a case-by-case basis, and patients in general will have to make a personal decision about whether they want to be inside or outside of the cocoon.

Regardless of vaccination status, people wishing to reduce their chances of acquiring or transmitting influenza should wash hands frequently, stay physically active, supplement with vitamin D or foods rich in vitamin D, and eat nutritious meals.

Tax credit program targeted to keep JROTC afloat

By Tyler Rhodes

Nome Public Schools Superintendent Jon Wehde told school board members at a Sept. 28 work session that he plans to again reach out to the Nome business community to try to find funding to keep alive Nome-Beltz High School's Junior Reserve Officers Training Corps program.

For the past two years, the youth military training program has been funded by two $100,000 donations from Sitnasuak Native Corp. through a state law that allows tax credits for donations to vocational education programs. In essence, the state allows businesses to contribute a certain amount of funds to educational programs instead of paying them to the state in the form of taxes.

The JROTC program at Nome-Beltz has been pulled back from the brink a number of times—once by the City of Nome when the district cut its funding, and then twice by Sitnasuak when both the school district and city failed to commit funds to the program. The program faced the additional threat of cancellation this year after a two-year search for a second instructor appeared to be destined for failure. The governing body that oversees JROTC requires two instructors. Nome's program continued under probation during the last two years.

The recent hiring of James Doll as the second JROTC instructor joining Kevin Knowlton solved the program's staffing problem. Superintendent Wehde is pledging to work on ensuring future funding for the program. "It is a unique and timeconsuming task to work on funding this element," Wehde told the board members present at the Sept. 28 meeting. Wehde approximated that personnel costs for the program approach $250,000. He said there is no flexibility in pay in the program.

So far, Wehde's plan essentially involves the same method utilized over the last two years, but this year the superintendent will try to spread the support over a wider base. Wehde said he plans to meet with certified public accountant Mark Johnson to help produce a presentation for local businesses and for-profit entities on

This will not be the first time Wehde has tried to drum up support for JROTC from area businesses. The superintendent tried a similar campaign last year with no success. He admitted that his efforts at communication may have been less than clear. "I had a letter out a year ago. It went nowhere. It was too complex. It read like I talk," the sometimes verbose superintendent said.

Wehde said he would also again meet with Sitnasuak to regarding JROTC funding. The superintendent told the attending board members-Barb Amarok, Barb Nickels and Wilma Osborne-that he would exhaust funding options through the tax credit program before suggesting that the program funding be placed in either the city or school budget.

Board member Amarok asked if the provisions of the state law could allow programs outside of JROTC to be funded. Wehde said the law had been amended to allow funding of secondary school vocational programs, of which military science belongs. He said other vocational programs could receive such funding. Bering Straits Native Corp. gave the Bering Strait School District's Northwest Alaska Career and Technical Center (NACTEC) a $200,000 donation in May 2009. NACTEC teaches a variety of vocational courses, ranging from automotive repair to culinary classes, to students throughout the region.

Phone Nome

At the Sept. 28 meeting, Wehde announced an initiative to touch base with students who have graduated from the district within the last six years. Dubbing it "Phone Nome," the effort will seek out graduates and ask them to fill out a confidential online survey to let the district know what they have done since they finished high school. "We're going to try to find everyone of them," Wehde said.

Wehde said questions will cover where the former students live and any post-secondary education received, among other items. The superintendent said the information will hopefully guide future priorities in the district's budget.

In other business

Nome-Beltz Junior/Senior High School Principal Steve Gast gave an update on emergency preparations at the school. He said he has met with Nome Police Chief John Papasodora to evaluate lock-down procedures at the school should it become necessary. He said the school has not conducted a full-blown lock-down drill, but has had instructed teachers and staff as to where they would need to go if a lock-down were initiated.

Nome Elementary School Principal and the district's Special Education Director Dave Keller, as well as Special Education Coordinator Sandy Harvey, gave trip reports on their attendance at the state special education conference. Keller focused his report on the response to intervention method of determining which students should receive special education services. He described the approach as proactive in comparison to what is known as the discrepancy model.

Addressing the board as a concerned citizen, Megs Testarmata said she was concerned about the lack of bussing to allow junior high students to participate in some after-school activities at the Nome-Beltz campus. Located a few miles outside of the population center of Nome, students who do not have access to private transportation, most often need to catch the bus right after school lets out to get a ride back into town. "Right now only select kids can participate in some activities," Testarmata said. Administrators said some junior high activities are held at the elementary school to allow greater participation, but also acknowledged the lack of bussing. Board members thanked Testarmata for bringing the issue to their attention and asked that the issue be put on the agenda for a future work session.

Janeen Sullivan also gave a trip report on a state-funded trip she took to be trained on the multitude of tests given to students throughout the district. Among her roles in the district, Sullivan is the state test and assessment coordinator.

those who will go on to college, those who will get vocational and technical training and those who will go directly into the work force after graduation. Gast said schools need to ensure that all three groups are being adequately served so they can be productive members of their community.

Speaking to the task force, Wehde described vocational education as a "line of defense" to keep kids in school, emphasizing the need to keep school relevant for students. The superintendent suggested that a component of career and technical education be included in graduation requirements for Alaska high school students.

Wehde and Gast also described the mentoring and club programs at Nome-Beltz as ways to keep students interested in coming to school and as a means for staff to help ensure students are staying on track to graduate.

With a slideshow running behind him displaying many of the projects and activities undertaken by the fifth through eighth graders at Anvil City Science Academy, the charter school's Hindman gave a rundown of how the school operates. Hindman stressed the reliance on parents at the school where three teachers work without a support staff. "The traditional parent-teacher conference is not sufficient," he said.

Hindman described how the school utilizes projects, performances and presentations in its teaching model. While the school serves fifth through eighth graders, Hindman said those in sixth grade and older are not taught strictly by grade level but by ability. The fifth graders, he said, generally have their hands full learning the ropes of the program and gaining the organizational skills required by the charter school. The school serves 44 students who are chosen by a lottery system. Hindman said the waiting list to get into the school has grown over the years.

University of Alaska President Gambell asked Hindman if he felt the program were scalable, wondering if it would work as well for 400 students as it does for 44. Hindman said he believed it would, but noted that the teaching staff would all need to be "on the same page." Several times during his presentation Hindman said having a stable staff and little to no turnover has figured large in the school's success

One member of the task force was already familiar with the school's program. Donald Handeland, a student representative to the Alaska State Board of Education and Early Development, attended the meeting as a task force member. Handeland, who grew up in Nome, also attended the charter school as a student for

The task force also heard from the Northwestern Alaska Technical and Career Center Director Doug Walrath on Tuesday. A tour was also slated for the facility at the Nome-Beltz campus that houses the program that provides short vocational classes for students from throughout the region.

Tours were also held Tuesday at the Northwest Campus, Anvil City Science Academy and Nome-Beltz Junior/Senior High School.

Created by Senate Bill 221 during the last session, the task force is made up of Senate President Gary Stevens, R-Kodiak and House Speaker Mike Chenault, R-Kenai, along with Sen. Charlie Huggins, Rep. Paul Seaton, University of Alaska President Patrick Gamble, Education Commissioner Larry LeDoux, and several others.

The group is tasked, among other things, to determine what is working in the state to reduce the need for remedial courses at the college level and what is working at the high school level to prepare students for college and careers. The task force also seeks to identify what is hindering students from being prepared for careers and college. The group is to issue a report to the Legislature by April.

Obituary

Former Alaska resident George Perry Merrifield, 77, died May 11, 2010, in Kent, Wash.

A graveside service was held Friday, Oct. 1 at Fort Richardson National Cemetery, with a potluck afterward at VFW Post 10252 in Mountain View.

George was born Nov. 13, 1932, in Seattle, Wash. to Maxwell and Grace Merrifield.

George served in the U.S. Navy in 1950-1951 and received a Japanese Occupation and Korean Service Medal.

In 1957, he moved to Redmond, Wash., where he enjoyed inner tubing, camping and fishing with his family and worked at a Safeway warehouse refrigeration unit.

In 1966, he moved to Alaska and lived here until July 2009, when he moved to Kent, where he could be close to his children and grandchildren and take long drives visiting places of his youth.

George enjoyed Alaska's wilderness by camping, fishing and picking wild berries. He also enjoyed crossword puzzles, indoor and outdoor sports and watching football, especially the Super Bowl.

George was a member of the International Union of Operating Engineers, Local 302, and worked on the trans-Alaska pipeline as a diesel mechanic and electrician. He worked for ITT, Alaska Gold Co. and at numerous other Alaska jobs, including bartending.

He is lovingly remembered by his wife of 30 years, Nellie Merrifield; sister, Gloria Vann; children, Barbara, Cindy, Carol (Darryl Swenson), Mike and Keith Merrifield; grandchildren, Carly Mayhew, Aurora Tallacksen, Madi Devine, Ryan and Patrick Merrifield; sisters-in-law and their spouses, Grace and Tim Homan, Gerri and George Thiele, Lora Larsen; brotherin-law, Bernie Larsen (Almira D.);

Saying It Sincerely

By Pastor Everett Arnold, Our Savior Lutheran Church for the Nome Ministerial Association

There seem to be moments when one or another of us is afraid to step up and help something happen. We may feel unsure our friends and family will do what we ask them to do. We may doubt they will stand behind us.

But take a look at 2 Timothy 1:12b-14. There St. Paul is telling us that Jesus our Savior has something put on deposit for us. It is something we can draw on when we need confidence to serve.

St. Paul is writing to young Timothy. This ancient Christian pastor is writing to a leader for the next generation of Christians. And he says "something is 'on deposit' for you." Paul uses the word "entrusted" twice in this passage. "Entrusted" is a Greek word used in business. "Entrusted" is really a Greek business term that means "put on deposit."

Sometimes we are not so sure of ourselves when we are asked to lead. So St. Paul is writing to us too. He is saying to us, "You don't need to be unsure of yourself if you are living for Jesus. Jesus has put something valuable 'on deposit' for you. Christ has put it into a trust fund for you."

And what is it? It is Jesus' promise to love us, to forgive us, and to share life with us. That's our Savior's promissory note. And it's on deposit for us. He's our trustee.

We can live like we have what he has put on deposit for us. We have his love, his forgiveness, and his life on deposit for us. We could live like we know we have it — like it's there for us to draw on at any time. Having Christ's promissory note on deposit for us can allow us to live humbly and yet confidently.

Our Lord's love is always there. His love stands behind us, even when we are unsure anybody cares what we are trying to accomplish. He cares. He respects us for trying. He respects our reasons for trying. His love is working through us. And He is getting more done that we can see.

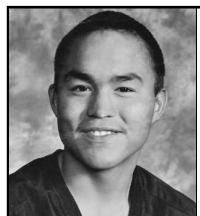

If we try and fail, his forgiveness is still on deposit for us. We can draw on it. We may sit in our dark corner and say "I tried, but it just didn't work out." But we can add our prayer, "Lord, forgive me. Love me anyway. And make the most out of my efforts."

We may try to serve but we end up humiliated. It may feel like our life has no value to this community, this organization, or this church. But his life is still on deposit for us. And we can draw on it. He lives. We shall live also. We shall share his life. And he already shares ours.

Our Lord's love, forgiveness and life are on deposit for us. Let us draw on them and live our lives serving good causes! We Thank You Richardson we would like to express our deep appreciation to the friends, family, and the people of Nome for the many acts of kindness, condolonces and friendship that was extended to us at this difficult time in our lives. Thank you for the many cards, letters, and phone calls, and a special thank you to all those who contributed food to the potluck after the service. Charlie will be missed and remembered by the many people his life has touched. Go Nanooks!

Frank and Dolores Richardson and family.

In Loving Memory Kevin James Hunt 06/12/89 - 10/09/05

He then looked down upon his earth and saw your loving face. He put his arms around you and lifted you to rest. His Garden must be beautiful, he always takes the best. As the days come and go and the world moves on, I know you're still here, you'll never be gone. On the night the Angel came and took your hand, We cried as you left for an unknown land. But Heaven rejoiced as you came into sight, For your soul was a diamond, shining so bright!

SITE INVESTIGATION/DESIGN ENGINEERING FOR UTILITY MAINTENANCE/RESPONSE EQUIPMENT STORAGE & PERSONNEL WORK FACILITY NOME, ALASKA

SOLICITATION OF INTEREST TO PROVIDE PROFESSIONAL DESIGN ENGINEERING AND TECHNICAL SERVICES

The City of Nome through its component unit, Nome Joint Utility System (NJUS), is the recipient of a State of Alaska Community Development Block Grant and NJUS is seeking professional and technical services for the purpose of site investigation/design engineering for a utility maintenance/response equipment storage and personnel work facility.

NJUS generates and distributes electricity utilizing diesel generation and operates water-sewer utilities providing service to the greater Nome area. NJUS desires to complete design of a multi-use equipment, storage and personnel work (offices) facility which will allow for amalgamation of ancillary facilities, provide additional inside storage for response equipment and supplies, and reduce operating costs by incorporating the use of waste heat from the power plant. The investigation will also include consideration of additional space to potentially include incorporation of multi-use storage of other community public works snow removal and street maintenance equipment.

Design of the facility will be from ground-up to final design and construction drawings, including geotechnical investigation of a site to determine suitability and foundation development. The proposed new facility will utilize waste heat recovery systems and will include design for potential other energy efficiency technology. General requirements to be incorporated will initially be provided to result in conceptual layout drawings before proceeding to final design.

The work to be performed is subject to the requirements of Section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as amended 12 U.S.C. 1701u (Section 3). The purpose of the Section 3 is to ensure that employment and other economic opportunities generated by HUD assistance or HUD assisted projects covered by Section 3, shall, to the greatest extent feasible, be directed to low and very low income persons, who are recipients of HUD assistance for housing.

Selected firm(s) must be licensed and qualified to do business in the State of Alaska. Selection will be based on, but is not limited to, prior successful facility design in similar climates, soil conditions and qualifications of personnel.

Interested parties should submit a written statement of interest by October 29, 2010. Include qualifications of individuals to be associated with the project, descriptions of previously designed facilities and references. Selection is anticipated to be made not later than December 1, 2010. Geotechnical Investigation and Design to be substantially complete by May 15, 2011.

TALLYING THE RESULTS—Marie Tozier (left), Barb Amarok (center) and Laureli Kinneen examine the election results displayed on a large screen at Old St. Joe's Hall Oct. 5 just after the unofficial count was released. Tozier and Amarok both won seats to the school board.

desire to unite the community to work together to improve the schools. "We all need to pull together to help students do their best," she said.

Amarok has been serving on the board the past few months after being appointed to a vacant seat as a result of a recall election this summer that saw two board members ousted. Instead of running for that same seat, she opted to run for Seat E which was open for a full three-year term after incumbent Kirsten Timbers decided not to run.

Tozier was elected to fill out the term in one of those two seats left empty from the recall election. Tozier's term in Seat A expires next year. Brennan will serve out the remainder of the term for Seat C, which will be up for election again in 2012.

Tozier, who waged a pretty visible campaign with Pullock and Amarok, believed the exposure through a candidates' forum hosted by the Arctic Business and Professional Women, questionnaires published in The Nome Nugget and some sign-waving on election day helped turn the tide in her favor. She thanked voters for coming out to the polls. Tozier said as a board member she will give attention to reading proficiency. "I have a passion for teaching kids reading," said Tozier, who home-schools her children. "One area that will help all the students in all the grades is reading."

In the city races, both West and Stiles held pretty significant margins over their challengers, Cliff Johnson and Tim Smith, respectively. West has been serving on the board since being appointed to Neal Foster's seat. Foster resigned from his seat after being appointed himself to the state Legislature to fill his late father's seat. Stiles is a newcomer to the common council.

Voter turnout was less than inspiring at 33.7 percent, just marginally higher than at the municipal election held a year earlier.

While usually not a noteworthy occurrence, the fact that this election did not spur a runoff vote or recount is news in itself. The school board recall vote early this summer resulted in several recounts and contested results. The municipal election a year ago resulted in a runoff for the school board race between Heather Payenna and Lynette Schmidt.

Three NSEDC board seats still undecided

By Laurie McNicholas

Unofficial results of four elections held Oct. 5 for open seats on the Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board of directors indicate that races in Shaktoolik and Unalakleet are undecided.

The Shaktoolik vote count resulted in a tie between the incumbent Harvey Sookiayak and his only challenger, Eugene Asicksik, a former president and chief executive officer of NSEDC. City Clerk Rita Auliye confirmed the 54-54 tie vote, but said it includes 15 questioned ballots cast by non-registered voters. As a result, a Shaktoolik voter is contesting the election.

Auliye said Local Government Specialist Leroy Seppilu of the Alaska Division of Community and Regional Affairs will review election results with the Shaktoolik City Council Oct. 19.

In Unalakleet, incumbent Frank Katchatag won 92 votes (38.8 percent of 237 votes cast), apparently falling short of the 40 percent majority required under NSEDC's election rules. William "Middy" Johnson finished second with 76 votes, Art Ivanoff drew 43 votes, and Charles Degnan had 23 votes.

NSEDC President and Board Chairman Dan Harrelson provided The Nome Nugget with the Unalakleet vote count, but he had not responded to the Nugget's question whether a runoff election will be scheduled between Katchatag and Johnson prior to press time for this edition.

Native contracting program again in the crosshairs

By Diana Haecker

Democratic Missouri Sen. Claire McCaskill last week said she plans to introduce in Congress a sweeping overhaul of the Small Business Administration's 8(a) program that would strip Alaska Native corporations of contracting privileges.

tions of contracting privileges.

A paper named "Legislation eliminating improper preferences for Alaska Native Corporations" outlines Sen. McCaskill's intentions to do away with capless contracts, to change the way Alaska Native corporations are automatically classified as economically disadvantaged, and to require that the corporations be managed by individuals who are socially and economically disadvantaged, among other things.

The federal Small Business Administration's 8(a) program is a business development program created to help small disadvantaged businesses compete in the U.S. economy and access the federal procurement market. Qualifying companies can secure lucrative government contracts without going through a bidding process. Alaska Native corporations were exempt from caps that apply to other 8(a) qualifying corporations, like a $3.5 million cap on services and $5.5 million for manufactured goods.

Bering Straits Native Corp. would take a big hit if McCaskill were to succeed with the legislation as drafted, said BSNC Chief Executive Officer Gail Schubert. "BSNC's 8(a) government contracts account for about 94 percent of our revenue," she said.

Since getting involved in 8(a) contracting through BSNC's defense, aerospace, construction work and security services, the bottom line increased for BSNC by more than $50 million. Schubert said that this in part has allowed BSNC to jump up 10 spots in the Top 49ers, a ranking of Alaskan-owned and -operated businesses based on gross revenues. The regional Native corporation climbed from 31st to 21st place of the most successful Alaskan businesses this year.

If McCaskill has it her way, this could change for the worse.

McCaskill proposed to eliminate the automatic designation that ANCs are socially disadvantaged businesses and that the burden would fall on the Native corporations to prove that there is "racial or ethnic prejudice or cultural bias within the American society because of their identities as members of those groups," according to the document.

Another requirement under Mc-Caskill's proposal would be that

Letters

Dear Editor,

October has always been a favorite time of the year for me. But it also has been the most difficult. I like the smell of fall leaves, walking on sandbars on the beach, the cold in the air, and eating fresh clam chowder. But the beginning of fall has also brought back one of the most difficult memories of my life. You see, on October 7, 1973 both of my parents died in what was called a homicidesuicide. My father shot my mother and then himself. I was 16 years old. My parents left nine of us children when they died. I can still recall the day as if it were yesterday. I can recall who told us that they were gone, I can still picture the funeral, the burial, and the raw pain of it all.

I am not a psychiatrist nor do I know all the answers to why it happened. What was going through my parents' minds? Did they even realize that they had left nine children when they died? Did they know that we cried and cried when they left us? Did they know that we wondered and wondered why they did it? All the 'whys' and the 'what ifs' of their untimely deaths cannot and will never be answered. All nine of us instantly became orphans.

The years that followed were extremely challenging for me. Some people told me, "If you would have been there it wouldn't have happened." So I blamed myself. All my anger went inside of me. I became an introvert. If you sat in a room with me I wouldn't talk to you unless you spoke to me first. I had guilt like you wouldn't imagine. Out of the nine of us children, two did not make it. They followed that same nath my parents took. We all got sent to various foster homes. I carried that false guilt with me for 17 years.

Yes, it is false guilt. No one would want to let his or her loved ones or anyone for that matter, commit suicide. It was a choice that they made themselves. What went on in my Dad's mind? I don't know. After all these years I honestly cannot answer that question. But I have come to the conclusion that it is the most selfish act someone can do to his or her family and friends. That is the truth.

Dumbing the Voters

A little bit of learning is a dangerous thing and a lot of learning is even more dangerous. It seems like the behind the scenes political manipulators fear education. Educated voters might ask embarrassing questions. Maybe they would even laugh at the lies in the campaign ads.

Why would a candidate for US Senate want to eliminate the Department of Education? Maybe he didn't like his first grade teacher. Some of us are old enough to remember when the Cambodian dictator killed all the teachers and educated people. He even killed people who wore glasses. Tyrants love to keep women uneducated. Ignorant citizens are easy to control. Why do candidate Joe Miller and his Tea Party backers want to eliminate the Department of Education? Public education is vital to the well-being of our nation. Now, more than ever we need to support our schools and encourage educational excellence. We need citizens who can solve problems, reason rational solutions, be inventive and creative. We need to be more than a nation of game players, texters and app junkies. We need to be critical of campaign ads and be able to tell truth from lies. We need to be able to put on out hip boots and shovel through the manure.

Many political campaign managers fear the light. They probably aren't vampires, although the Republican Senatorial candidate from Delaware claims to have been a witch— and we think Sarah is a loose cannon. An enlightened and educated public strikes fear into the hearts of the political manipulators. Imagine what it would be like if we had no federal support for education. Now that would be scary.

Compiled by Diana Haecker

Department of Interior recommends two added rural seats to subsistence board

Almost a year after Department of Interior Secretary Ken Salazar announced a sweeping review of the way subsistence is regulated in Alaska, his department recommended to expand the Federal Subsistence Board by two seats to be held by rural Alaskans. It also recommended giving more influence and clout to regional advisory councils

But the DoI's recommendations didn't touch on Alaska Natives' demands for customary rights. An AFN resolution last year asked to amend ANILCA to provide for Alaska Native Peoples customary and traditional hunting, fishing and gathering rights plus rural subsistence priority and to replace the federal subsistence board with an entity comprised of subsistence users rather than federal employees. The department said that redefining who has priority to subsist on federal land would have to come out of Congress rather than the DoI.

Under ANILCA, rural Alaskans have priority to hunt and fish on federal lands.

Miller embroiled in controversy

Alaska Dispatch on Monday filed a lawsuit against the Fairbanks North Star Borough over files it requested dealing with Republican Senate nominee Joe Miller's employment records. According to the online newspaper, Miller was caught using borough equipment when he tried to unseat Alaska GOP party chairman Randy Ruedrich. Miller worked for the North Star borough until resigning in 2009. On Monday, after a Chamber of Commerce debate in Anchorage, Miller told reporters that he will not be answering any more questions about his personal background for the remainder of the campaign. The senatorial race has dominated headlines since Tea-Party Express and Sarah Palin-endorsed Miller defeated incumbent Lisa Murkowski in the primaries. Miller runs on a platform of curbing federal spending and limiting government. In the weeks following his primaries win, reports came out that Miller accepted federal farm subsidies, low-income hunting and fishing licenses, Denali KidCare and that his wife received unemployment benefits.

Arctic Research Commission hears of wildfires and reindeer

The U.S. Arctic Research Commission convened for three days of meetings at the University of Alaska Fairbanks last week. Acting commission chair UAF Professor Buck Sharpton is one of three Alaskans on the seven-member panel. The panel heard of UAF researchers dealing with wildfires. Climate warming is blamed for an increase in the occurrence of lightning that's making North Slope tundra more vulnerable to wildfire.

UAF Reindeer Program Manager Greg Finstad held a presentation on how to revive Alaska's reindeer ranching business as a means to improving the economy and life in rural Alaska.

Denali project draws bids

BP-ConocoPhillips' joint natural gas pipeline project, Denali, has received significant commercial interest from North Slope producers. BP and ConocoPhillips are competing with TransCanada and Exxon Mobil to build a pipeline capable of carrying 4.5 billion cubic feet of natural gas a day. TransCanada and Exxon Mobil completed the open season process earlier this summer with similar results. On the federal level, legislation passed granting loan guarantees and other federal aid to the company that builds a pipeline connecting the North Slope to outside markets.

Clark conviction to be dismissed

AP- The U.S. Attorney's Office said that it will dismiss the corruption conviction of Jim Clark, former Gov. Frank Murkowski's chief of staff. Prosecutors intend to dismiss the conviction because the Supreme Court has changed the law to which Clark pleaded guilty. Clark pleaded guilty in 2008 to a single count of defrauding Alaska citizens of their right to his honest services as a public official. Clark hid from state election regulators more than $68,000 in polls and consultants' fees he secured from the oil field services company VECO Corp. for Frank Murkowski's failed gubernatorial re-election bid in 2006. Frank Murkowski was not implicated, and Clark said he acted on his own. Clark's sentencing was repeatedly delayed because prosecutors wanted to wait until after the possible trial of former state Rep. Bruce Weyhrauch, R-Juneau, on bribery, extortion and conspiracy charges. Prosecutors say Weyhrauch failed to disclose during the 2006 legislative session that he was seeking legal work from Veco at a time the oil-field services company was lobbying the Legislature on oil taxes. An appeals court last month threw out evidence that federal prosecutors hoped to use in the corruption case against Weyhrauch. The courts say there's no specific state law requiring such disclosure. In their filing in U.S. District Court, federal prosecutors said they intend to hold Clark to his plea-bargain pledge to cooperate in any future corruption trials and investigations.

Shell scales back 2011 Arctic exploration plan

Oil giant holds off on Chukchi until court cases resolved

By Dan Joling The Associated Press

Shell Oil announced last week that it has scaled back its Arctic Ocean exploration plans for 2011 to promising sites in the Beaufort Sea, backing off prospects in the Chukchi Sea until legal clouds are cleared.

"Our plan is to drill in the Beaufort in 2011," said Shell Alaska Vice President Pete Slaiby.

The company has applied for one exploration well in the Beaufort off Alaska's north coast and will seek a permit for a second. The company will hold off applying for well permits in the Chukchi off the northwest Alaska coast until two court cases are resolved.

Shell's plans to drill exploration wells in both areas this year were put on hold by Interior Secretary Ken Salazar after the Deepwater Horizon disaster in the Gulf of Mexico. Salazar suspended applications for permits and has set no timetable for lifting the suspension.

Environmental groups and some Alaska Native groups bitterly oppose drilling in Arctic waters. They say oil companies have not shown they can clean up a spill in ice-choked waters. They also say the remote location of drilling sites, the area's notorious inclement weather and the lack of infrastructure, including a deep-water port, would make a cleanup of a major spill nearly impossible.

Shell has invested more than $3.5

billion in the Arctic outer continental shelf, including $2.2 billion in leases in the Chukchi that have been challenged.

Slaiby said Shell will need a decision by December to move forward with its 2011 plans, which involve moving north a drilling ship and a small fleet of support vessels, including spill response boats.

Shell has continuously stressed that Arctic drilling would be in shallow water and that the risk of a spill is minimal. Slaiby said the company since the Deepwater Horizon blowout has taken "extraordinary steps to build confidence around our 2011 program."

The company also will position a second drilling ship in Alaska as an additional safety measure. If the first drilling ship were crippled by a blowout, a second ship could drill a relief well.

"We also confirmed our commitment to engineer an oil spill containment system, which is designed to capture hydrocarbons at the source in the unlikely event of a shallow water blowout," Slaiby said.

Some of Shell's Chukchi prospects are 140 miles offshore, but Slaiby said the distance did not contribute to the decision not to seek permits there for the 2011 drilling season. Rather, it was a lawsuit in Washington, D.C., that found flaws in the federal government's 5-year leasing plan, and a ruling in a second lawsuit filed in Anchorage that the former U.S. Minerals Management Service had not required adequate environmental reviews for the Chukchi leases. "All of these issues that we've got, legally, in the Chukchi, I think are fairly small and narrow," he said.

Environmental groups reacted with skepticism to Shell's plans.

"We don't have assurances that these will work, especially in the icy, hazardous and often dark conditions of the Arctic."

- Chris Krenz of Oceana

Slaiby said Shell is optimistic the lawsuits will be resolved.

Chris Krenz of Oceana said the organization was disappointed that Shell plans to drill on its federal leases in the Beaufort. The Arctic lacks adequate oil-spill response capability and there's not enough known about a spill's effects on endangered whales, threatened polar bears, walrus and ice seals, Krenz said.

He praised Shell's additional safety measures, but said, "We don't have assurances that these will work, especially in the icy, hazardous and often dark conditions of the Arctic."

Marilyn Heiman, U.S. Arctic program director for the Pew Environment Group, said Shell is moving forward under a drilling plan that said a blowout was "not seen as a reasonably foreseeable impacting event.

"The exploration plan is outdated," she said. "They need to submit a new exploration plan."

The state's Office of Veterans Affairs advocates for the needs of resident veterans before the federal Department of Veterans Affairs and administers grants to veterans. Veterans need to register with the state VA to get benefits from the federal Dept. of Veterans Affairs. The University of Alaska Fairbanks Cooperative Extension Service has received a $411,256 U.S. Department of Agriculture grant to develop and deliver a course called the Alaskan Growers School in rural Alaska. Project director Heidi Rader with the Tanana Chiefs Conference, said the course will help Alaska Natives in remote communities to grow food to complement traditional subsistence activities.

AFN convention highlights Village Survival!

Next week's convention of the Alaska Federation of Natives is themed Village Survival. This year, Fairbanks hosts the largest gathering of Alaska Natives. Gloria O'Neill, president and CEO of the Cook Inlet Tribal Council will deliver this year's keynote address. Topics on the agenda span the gamut from the federal subsistence overhaul, protecting Native 8(a) programs, affordable energy and health. On Friday afternoon, the convention will host a Senatorial candidate debate followed by a one-hour gubernatorial candidate debate.

2010 Bering Strait School District Youth Leaders Retreat

Courtesy of Matthew Guiffre KNOM Radio

The 2010 Bering Strait School District Youth Leaders Retreat, or the Peer Helpers Program, was held the weekend of October 1 in Unalakleet. This was sponsored by Kawerak Wellness Department which operates the Bering Strait Suicide Prevention Grant. In all, 41 high school students from throughout the region were selected by their peers and teachers as individuals that would be sought after if someone wanted to talk about an issue in their life. These students, chosen for their unique place in their schools and communities came together not only to learn from trained instructors about leadership, but also to learn from one another about what it takes to truly be a youth leader.

The activities kicked off on Friday evening in the gym of Frank A. Degnan High School with speeches from local leaders William "Middiy" Johnson, the mayor of Unalakleet and State Representative, Neil Foster. Each leader stressed the importance of leadership and the impact that a good leader can have on a community.

The event was led by Michelle Woods who works for Northwest Arctic Borough School District in Kotzebue. The weekend consisted of well organized team building activities, as well as workshops on multiple issues that exist in Western Alaskan communities. Friday evening activities included unique team building activities that involved working in large groups and stressing how to communicate in multiple situations. Students were given the opportunity during many of the weekend's events to step up and take leadership rolls. Many rose to the challenge.

Through Saturday morning and afternoon the students learned a variety of different aspects of leadership from how to make good eye contact to how to establish trust in small groups of people. Students were given the opportunity to do "trust falls" which involved putting their faith in other students and believing that they would catch them when they fell. The idea behind the exercise was to establish trust in their groups and at the same time demonstrate how tackling a problem is easier when there are other people to share the burden with.

Workshops that were attended over the weekend conference were focused on bullying, suicide prevention, and healthy relationships. While each workshop focused on a different issue that exists in Western Alaskan culture, each also had many positive aspects that helped bring new ideas to the minds of the young leaders. By the end of the afternoon, students had experienced a powerful 24 hours that had allowed a broad range of emotions to surface. Everything from laughter to tears were shared over the weekend.

Having to surrender their electronic devices at the beginning of the conference, including cell phones and ipods, students were given the unique opportunity to become completely submerged in the leadership retreat. Many students claim to have learned a large amount after the weekend concluded, not just about leadership, but also about themselves and the people around them.

Parnell takes the campaign to Nome, Kotzebue

By Tyler Rhodes

After Oct. 7 Gov. Sean Parnell should be well familiar with Alaska Airlines' service to Nome and Kotzebue.

On a one-day campaign blitz, Parnell, the candidate, hopped all three jets serving the two communities, requiring landings in Nome and Kotzebue twice. Parnell, who assumed the governor's desk after Sarah Palin quit, is seeking election to the position outright in the Nov. 2 vote.

Republicans Parnell and runningmate Mead Treadwell will face Democratic challengers Ethan Berkowitz and Diane Benson at the ballot box.

With only a couple of hours at his disposal at each stop, Parnell packed in appointments with local media and meet-and-greet events in both communities. His stop in Nome included a quick interview with The Nome Nugget.

Parnell said his campaign is primarily focused on families and jobs. "What will we see after your term?" Nome resident Melanie Bahnke asked Parnell at a public forum at the Polar Cafe. "Safer homes and more job opportunities," Parnell responded.

In terms of families, Parnell cited efforts to improve education, reduce the rate of domestic violence and sexual assault, and bolster suicide prevention initiatives. "If we don't have more healthy families and better opportunities in our schools, our future is less sure," Parnell said during his interview at The Nugget.

Parnell cited his Alaska

SAT or ACT standardized tests.

At the meet-and-greet at the Polar Cafe, Kawerak's community education program director Ron Huffman stressed the need to combat the number of dropouts in the region. "We really need help, there's too many kids dropping out," he said. Huffman said his program helps 35 to 40 students attain their GED each year, a number that taxes the system. "We can barely handle it," he told the governor.

While at The Nugget Parnell said he believed the scholarship program addressed dropouts. "Part of the Alaska Performance Scholarship is to keep kids in school," he said. "I prefer carrots rather than sticks."

For younger students, Parnell said he would like to see a focus on early literacy. "We need to make sure young elementary school students have greater opportunity to learn to read," he said.

In terms of jobs, Parnell promotes spurring private enterprise through incentives and creating work through public infrastructure projects. For western Alaska, those projects could largely mean roads. He cited the $8 million spent toward establishing a road to the Ambler mining district west of the Haul Road south of the Brooks Range, and $1 million appropriated for further study of a road linking Nome to the state's highway system. The Ambler route could road to Nome, he said. Roads, Parnell said, could spur economic development both through the jobs provided in the construction phase and the opportunities, such as resource extraction, they open up just by their existence. "At times, a road itself builds its own economies," he said.

Parnell also touched on renewable energy and the need to transition away from diesel fuel for heating and energy production in rural Alaska. He also suggested the use of natural gas in the region as a way of bringing down energy costs, noting that the state could be a willing partner in developing deposits with a local company. He acknowledged that the known deposits in the area are too small for development by the large energy companies, but suggested that they could serve small communities.

Regarding the role of the larger energy production firms in Alaska, said he promotes Parnell incentivizing further development in existing oil fields as well as the development of harder-to-produce heavy oil as means to keep the resource industry alive in Alaska and supporting state government. "I want to encourage additional resource development," he said.

Parnell said he also believes longterm planning is essential to responsibly manage the state's finances. "Our administration has established a practice of looking 10 years down the road," he said. With much of the state's funding received from oil royalties and taxes-a revenue source subject to volatility— Parnell said he takes the state's savings accounts into consideration in making the decade-long plans. He was quick to point out that those savings accounts, the Constitutional Budget Reserve and the Statutory Budget Reserve, did not include the Alaska Permanent Fund.

Parnell also said he promotes fiscal restraint, even when times are good for the budget, as they have been for the last couple of years. "I did use the veto pen at record levels and yet we had a robust capital budget," Parnell said.

On other issues important to the region, Parnell was noncommittal on whether he promotes a rural or Alaska Native preference on subsistence. He said the current system of dual management between the state and federal governments needs to be clarified. "On the political level, it's something that gets worked out day by day," he said.

Regarding the increased marine traffic through the region as reduced ice conditions allow more passage, Parnell said he sees greater opportunity for commerce and shipping. He also said the changing conditions could allow for Nome's port to play a larger role in the region.

Young greets voters in Nome on short campaign stop

By Tyler Rhodes

As election day nears, U.S. Rep. Don Young joined the lineup of candidates passing through Nome to meet with constituents and ask for their vote. Young, the Republican, is running against Democrat Harry Crawford in the Nov. 2 election.

In an interview with The Nome Nugget, Young covered a range of subjects as he touched on no-bid contracting for Alaska Native corporations, subsistence rights, the stimulus package and providing energy for Alaska's rural communities.

Alaska's sole congressman didn't parse his words when asked about his response to the news that Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Mo., was planning to introduce legislation to place limits on Alaska Native corporations and their ability to gain no-bid contracts from the federal government. "What she's doing is dead wrong. [McCaskill] doesn't know the front side and back side of an 8(a) contract," Young said.

Young defended the law that allows the corporations to receive nobid contracts without limit, noting he has never heard any complaint from any of the government organizations who have had the contracts fulfilled. "This is a good system, it works well for the nation. It works well, of course, for the Native corporations. Have there been some mistakes, probably, but not many," he said.

Young said he believes there is no need to change the law. "It's a classic example of people who are successful being attacked after they become successful because people don't like it to happen," he said.

In addressing energy matters in Alaska, Young advocated for a more aggressive approach to developing geothermal resources for power. He panned approaches like wind energy, saying they are not economically feasible and mostly rely on subsidies. "The wind power is the most expensive power you've got. Will it work? Yes, if you're being paid for it," he said.

Young said he feels the state should be more aggressive in addressing rural power needs. "There is no real plan to produce power. We have a lot of meetings, a lot of discussion, no new power. This is not a new problem," he said.

As for a natural gas pipeline, Young believes the abundance of gas in the lower 48 and low prices will conspire to prevent a gas line to the south from becoming a reality. "I want to put a gas line in the state," he said, noting that an in-state line could allow for products like propane that could be shipped to rural villages.

Young said the high cost of energy in rural Alaska will remain prohibitive to economies, essentially making resource extraction the only game in town. "If you don't have power, you don't have nothing," he said. "The only thing we have in rural Alaska is resources. And if we're not allowed to develop our resources, then we don't have an economic base."

Young also said he is in favor of the development of a road to Nome, but acknowledged that it will most likely remain a dream. "I heard about that in California in 1958. I came to Alaska in '59 thinking they were going to have a road to Nome," Young said.

More than any geographic and cost challenges, Young said potential conflicts due to land ownership along the route—be it public, private or protected—will keep the project from becoming reality. "It's not going to be built, realistically, and it's because of the makeup of the land," he said.

Speaking on the economy on a national level, Young criticized the president's stimulus plan and railed against what he sees as an overly cumbersome regulatory regime that limits the ability of U.S. industry to flourish. "It was a joke," he said of the stimulus. "You cannot create jobs that do not create new wealth." Young said the plan only created temporary jobs that will not spur a long-term recovery.

Young said too much power has been given to the executive branch of government to write regulations that stifle production. "I've introduced a bill...to have no new regulations for two years," he said.

In regard to subsistence, Young said he believed the decision on who gets to hunt what and where should be based on abundance. In times of shortage, he said priority should go to the state's rural residents. "I wrote the subsistence provision that is rule. That's the way it is going to stay," Young said. The state and federal laws on subsistence harvests are currently at odds.

Young also called for more intensive management of Alaska's wildlife to yield more game animals to harvest. "We don't look upon the increased production of what it is we subsist on," he said. "What do we do in the state to improve that? Nothing," he said. Young said other states institute more aggressive management. He cited other states that utilize strategies such as feed plots, culling and habitat development to promote stocks. "The state has always been a distributor of game and never a manager of game," he said.

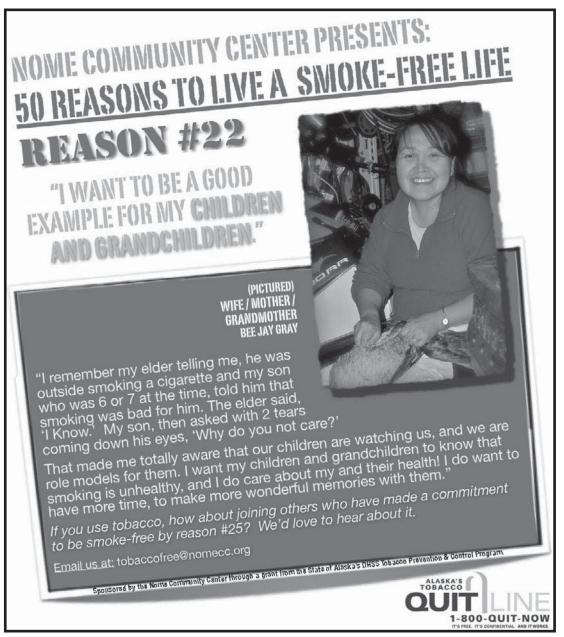

Young also commented on the changing Arctic conditions, noting that he has been involved with legislation to study the feasibility of Arctic ports, to map the ocean floor and study ice conditions. He said an additional Coast Guard presence in the region is warranted, but would leave the decision to the Coast Guard as to where the military branch would locate. "The best harbor we have is in Teller, but what is in Teller? There is no infrastructure," he said. "Nome is probably the most logical area, but that is going to be up to the Coast Guard."

When asked about the three-way race for Alaska's Senate seat involving Tea Party-backed Joe Miller, Democrat Scott McAdams and incumbent and write-in candidate Lisa Murkowski, Young reserved comment. "I've got my own playground, I'm staying in it," he said.

In terms of his own campaign, Young said Crawford will be his 23rd opponent. He showed little fear of not winning another term. "All the respect to Harry...I can just do a better job," Young said. "I'm good at what I do, and it's not just everyday work."

Over the past few weeks, Joe Miller has laid out his plan for the future. He wants to say no to a third of our economy. To all those federal dollars that pay for essentials like seawalls and ports, health care, alternative energy and programs that keep our fisheries healthy.

But Joe's plan doesn't end there. He wants to cut off our personal safety nets, and eliminate everything that's not in the Constitution.

Medicare • Unemployment benefits • Social Security

2011 Bering Sea pollock catch likely to increase after several years of decline

By Laurie McNicholas

Results of a bottom trawl survey of the eastern Bering Sea shelf conducted last summer by the Alaska Fisheries Science Center, National Fisheries Service (AFSC/NMFS) yielded higher biomass estimates than last year for all species except Alaska plaice, which was down slightly from 2009.

The 2010 estimate for pollock is 3.75 million tons and ranks 23rd out of 29 surveys, Bob Lauth told the Bering Sea Aleutian Islands (BSAI) Groundfish Plan Team at a meeting late last month in Seattle. Lauth is principal investigator for the survey. He said the estimate is below average by about 22 percent (the average is 4.83 million tons), but represents a 64 percent increase from the 2009 value of 2.28 million tons.

Based on the survey report, the BSAI Groundfish Plan Team recommended 2011/2012 proposed specifications for the acceptable biological catch (ABC) of pollock at 1.1 million metric tons, up from 813,000 metric tons in 2010. The team's ABC recommendations, together with social and economic factors, are considered by the North Pacific Fishery Management Council in determining the annual total allowable catch (TAC) in the Bering Sea pollock fishery.

Several members of the council's Science and Statistical Committee cheered when Grant Thompson of AFSC/NMFS highlighted pollock increases found in the 2010 eastern Bering Sea bottom trawl survey at a meeting Oct. 6 in Anchorage. The committee is composed of leading scientists in biology, economics, statistics and social science and advises the council on scientific and other technical matters. Thompson said AFSC scientists gave themselves silver stars for predicting the biomass would be up for many species this of Bering Sea pollock at 815,000 metric tons, far less than the proposed TAC of 1.2 million metric tons. The council's decision was based on results of 2009 surveys indicating that the pollock biomass was low and fewer young fish entered the population between 2001 and 2005.

The 2009 TAC for Bering Sea pollock also was limited to 815,000 metric tons, the lowest level in more than 30 years. The 2008 Bering Sea pollock TAC was 1 million metric tons, a decline of 28.3 percent compared to the 2007 TAC.

The annual Bering Sea pollock harvest is a vital source of revenues for Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., which represents 15 Bering Strait communities in the Western Alaska Community Development Quota Program. Did you wash your hands?

Alaska Family Doctor

As we enter the cough, cold, and flu season, it is worth a reminder that there is a proven method for stopping the spread of many diseases: wash

According to the U.S. Center for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC), hand washing is the number one way to prevent infection and illness

The ancient world knew that hand washing was important. A number of ancient cultures prescribed specific rituals for washing the hands. Many of these cultures connected hand cleansing with reducing the spread of illness even though the cause of infectious disease would not be discovered for several thousand years.

By the mid-1800s this common sense had been lost on most medical schools where students would routinely go from the anatomy lab to take care of patients in the wards without washing their hands. Patients often died from infectious diseases that we now know were caused by bacteria transferred from the hands of these students.

In 1847, an astute Hungarian doctor named Ignaz Semmelweis proved that women in his obstetrical ward did not die from "childbed fever" when medical students washed their hands before examining the patients. Semmelweis was highly ridiculed by colleagues of his day, and it would be nearly 50 years before his methods of hand washing would become common place in the medical community.

It is widely believed that President James Garfield died in 1881, not from an assassin's bullet, but from a massive infection caused by the examination of White House doctors who repeatedly probed the bullet wound with unwashed fingers.

We have come a long way when it comes to hand washing expectations. According to the American Society for Microbiology and the American Cleaning Institute, in a nationwide observational study, 85 percent of Americans wash their hands when using public restrooms. This is up 77 percent in 2007. Soap dispensers in restrooms, sanitizer dispensers in public areas, and sign reminders to wash your hands have made hand washing an expected norm, not only in hospitals or medical clinics, but also in every restaurant, restroom and household.

The study also shows there is room for improvement since only 39 percent of Americans regularly wash their hands after coughing or sneezing.

doctors always washed their hands before and after using the restroom.

Children should also be taught to wash their hands after playing with shared toys or after playing outdoors.

Effective hand washing involves scrubbing the hands and fingers for about 20 seconds with soap or an alcohol-based hand sanitizer. According to experts at the Mayo

Hand washing is important in many situations:

Before preparing or eating foods, inserting contact lenses, giving medication, or caring for wounds.

After touching raw meats, changing diapers, caring for a sick person, handling garbage, handling money, playing with animals, coughing or sneezing into the hand, or whenever the hands appear soiled.

Hands should always be washed after using the restroom. For what it's worth, when I was in medical school, I noticed the infectious disease

When I finally realized that it was their own choice I could finally let my parents go. I was set free from the false guilt that usually accompanies a suicide-related death.

I will always love my parents. I believe that is a God-given gift because kids will always love their parents no matter what they do or don't do. Yes, I wish they lived to see me become a mom, a grandmother, and a student who almost has her teaching certificate! I wish they could see that I am a strong-willed person, that I have a strong voice for some issues that concern me, and that I love to learn about new things.

Thank you for publishing this. Sincerely, Emily Murray Elim, AK

Hi again.

I know I've been writing a lot lately but I feel that I need to get my points across and I'm not sure I have.

Most important: People are supposed to count the most in the world. No matter what the race or the religion-we are supposed to treat each other with compassion and respect. We are not supposed to beat up or steal from each other but treat each other, like we may never see each other again (because who knows what may happen) with Love for each other. After all, it really is fun meeting other people.

If they are so concerned about the health of our people, then they need to turn the cost of food around. They need to make the prices of fruit and produce (only with other health foods) affordable for our people. Not only would it make us healthier, but it just may help out the economy. You'd be amazed at the difference.

Although there are others things, I will say I think that we are getting tired of our friends and family members getting beaten up for nothing. We want to see something being done about it. Sometimes it happens because a person feels they need to prove themselves to someone else, or it happens just for the hell of it. Enough is enough. I say we need to write to our legislators and congressmen and try to stop the violence. Make the people who do harm to other people more accountable for themselves. Ask them to pass a law that says if a person/people does harm to another person/people, not only should they do jail time but they should be made to pay for the injured person's hospital bills.

Anyway, I hope you all have a great fall and winter.

By Senator Donald Olson NORTHERN WATERS TASK FORCE APPOINTEES ANNOUNCED

I am pleased to be appointed by the Alaska State Legislature to the Northern Waters Task Force as an alternate to Senators Lyman Hoffman and Bert Stedman. The task force, comprised of local, state and federal officials from Alaska coastal regions, will meet over the course of the next two years to examine creating a joint state/federal commission responsible for overseeing the development of northern ocean waters. The group will provide recommendations to the legislature by January 20, 2012, with a final report due January 30, 2012.

The task force will decide the framework of a joint federal and state entity to coordinate U.S. and Alaska interests that result from opening Arctic waters for transportation, national security, and resource development. The broad appointment of members allows us to bring in regional leaders from all aspects of government to work with residents, businesses and interests in the region to give all areas a voice and stake in state and federal policy as we develop the northern ocean waters. As with other appointed leaders, I feel assured with the selection of members of the Northern Waters Task Force. Our abilities together will create quality government policy toward development in our Arctic waters, which many of my constituents are directly dependent on and who will be directly impacted by any development that takes place

ALASKA HEALTH CARE COMMISSION EXTENDED

I am pleased to be re-appointed by

Senate President Gary Stevens to represent the Senate on the Alaska Health Care Commission. This past session, I sponsored Senate Bill 172, which passed the Legislature and was signed by Governor Parnell. The bill extends the Alaska Health Care Commission and establishes it in state law. The purpose of the commission is to recommend and develop a statewide plan to address the quality, accessibility, and availability of health care for all citizens of Alaska. Senate Bill 172 also provides for the reappointment of the current commission members. They are Keith Campbell, Valerie Davidson, Jeffery Davis, Dr. Ward Hurlburt, Wayne Stevens, Dr. Larry Stinson, Linda Hall, Representative Wes Keller. I look forward to working with the new and returning members of the Alaska Health Care Commission.

ELECTION RESULTS

As your senator, I was troubled by this year's primary election voter turnout. According to the Division of Elections official report, only 164,707 out of 487,456 or 34 percent of registered voters statewide actually voted this year. In District T, approximately 4,658 out of 16,987 or 27 percent of registered voters submitted votes. I'd like to encourage all who are eligible to register and vote this November.

There are many common reasons eligible voters don't vote; the end result is a huge loss for our families and communities. I want to remind our constituents that elected officials make decisions every day that affect the lives of rural and Native people. Decisions made by elected officials affect healthcare, education, subsistence and commercial fishing, law enforcement, and tribal sovereignty issues, to name a few. It would be in the best interest of all eligible voters to take advantage of their right to

I encourage local organizations to conduct voter education campaigns to get the word out in rural Alaska about the issues and empower Native people to carry that information with them to the voting booth. Pay particular attention to community members who have special barriers to voting: people with disabilities, second language speakers, those experiencing homelessness, ex-felons and those who are transient. For instance, help homeless individuals find ways to establish residency, help those with disabilities know their rights and help individuals who served time and are off parole to reestablish their right to vote. Public education and awareness, along with organizing with our community members can make a huge difference in political representation for rural

We need to ensure that all of the voters that register end up going to the polls on Election Day. It is important not only to remind each other to vote, but also to provide voters with the voting information and transportation to the polls, if necessary. We want to remove as many barriers to political participation as possible. We can create plans in each community to fulfill these roles to ensure that the voices of our communities are heard this Election Day.

The last day to register to vote is Sunday October 3, 2010 to vote in

SITE INVESTIGATION/DESIGN ENGINEERING FOR UTILITY MAINTENANCE/RESPONSE EQUIPMENT STORAGE & PERSONNEL WORK FACILITY Nome, Alaska

SOLICITATION OF INTEREST TO PROVIDE PROFESSIONAL DESIGN ENGINEERING AND TECHNICAL SERVICES

The City of Nome through its component unit, Nome Joint Utility System (NJUS), is the recipient of a State of Alaska Community Development Block Grant and NJUS is seeking professional and technical services for the purpose of site investigation/design engineering for a utility maintenance/response equipment storage and personnel work facility.

NJUS generates and distributes electricity utilizing diesel generation and operates water-sewer utilities providing service to the greater Nome area. NJUS desires to complete design of a multi-use equipment, storage and personnel work (offices) facility which will allow for amalgamation of ancillary facilities, provide additional inside storage for response equipment and supplies, and reduce operating costs by incorporating the use of waste heat from the power plant. The investigation will also include consideration of additional space to potentially include incorporation of multi-use storage of other community public works snow removal and street maintenance equipment.

Design of the facility will be from ground-up to final design and construction drawings, including geotechnical investigation of a site to determine suitability and foundation development. The proposed new facility will utilize waste heat recovery systems and will include design for potential other energy efficiency technology. General requirements to be incorporated will initially be provided to result in conceptual layout drawings before proceeding to final design.

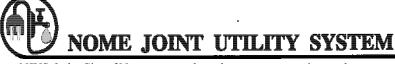

The work to be performed is subject to the requirements of Section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as amended 12 U.S.C. 1701u (Section 3). The purpose of the Section 3 is to ensure that employment and other economic opportunities generated by HUD assistance or HUD assisted projects covered by Section 3, shall, to the greatest extent feasible, be directed to low and very low income persons, who are recipients of HUD assistance for housing.

Selected firm(s) must be licensed and qualified to do business in the State of Alaska. Selection will be based on, but is not limited to, prior successful facility design in similar climates, soil conditions and qualifications of personnel.

Interested parties should submit a written statement of interest by October 29, 2010. Include qualifications of individuals to be associated with the project, descriptions of previously designed facilities and references. Selection is anticipated to be made not later than December 1, 2010. Geotechnical Investigation and Design to be substantially complete by May 15, 2011.

the November 2 General Election. You can check your voter registration status at the Division of Elechttp://www.elections.alaska.gov/inde x.php. In order to register, a current and valid state ID card or birth certificate is required. Tribal ID cards are not accepted by the State as valid identification. To apply for a state ID card, visit the DMV website at

I'd also like to mention that a bill I sponsored will be on the General Election ballot this year. Senate Joint Resolution 21 "Increase Number of Legislators and Districts" is scheduled to be Ballot Measure 1 in November. This Act will amend the Alaska Constitution to increase the number of state legislators from 60 to 66. Six new legislative districts will be created as a result, adding 4 representatives and 2 senators to the Legislature. The changes proposed by the Act will become effective after a new redistricting plan is adopted following the 2010 federal census.

I sponsored the legislation that is putting this on the ballot so that Alaskans can have more balanced representation in our districts. This change will better reflect the constitutional intent to provide citizens with the most accessible and responsive representation possible. The measure allows the redistricting board to add representation to the districts with the most population growth without creating even larger rural districts. Currently, the Alaska Constitution sets the number of state election districts at 40 House Districts and 20 Senate Districts. Due to population shifts, it is anticipated that in the next redistricting process, some areas will lose representation. If this happens, some districts will become so large and diverse it will be impossible for one Senator and one Representative to adequately represent that area. The passage of SJR 21 places a constitutional amendment before voters in the November 2010 election. This will appear on your election ballot as Ballot Measure 1. Ballot Measure 1 amends the constitution adding four House and two Senate districts, expanding the legislature from 60 to 66 members.

When Alaska's constitution was drafted, its authors required each election district to be composed of a compact and integrated socioeconomic unit. Though the state's population and demographics have changed dramatically since statehood, the number of election districts has remained the same. In 50 years of statehood, Alaska has not changed the makeup of its legislature. During that same period, the population has more than tripled. Currently, Alaska has the smallest legislature in the nation, yet there are several other states with similar populations that have an average legislature that is more than double what we have in Alaska. This is an essential issue for all of Alaska and I urge you to take some time and familiar with issue. Without the passage of Ballot Measure 1, rural Alaska will lose representation. More importantly, I encourage you to get out and vote on November 2.

REDISTRICTING

The United States Constitution reguires that the population be counted every 10 years and a census, which all Alaskans are required to complete, was just finished this summer. The census information is used for a variety of things including redistricting. Redistricting is a process used by states to balance out the legislative representation of the population. As the population distribution changes over time, district lines must be redrawn to reflect those changes and preserve the "one person, one vote" concept. The Alaska State Constitution says that a five-member independent Redistricting Board must draw the new district lines. All board members must be residents of the state for at least one year, and none may be public employees or officials at the time of or during their appointment.

I'd like to acknowledge Marie Kasannaaluk Greene of Kotzebue for her appointment by Chief Justice Walter L. Carpeneti to the Redistrict-Board. Greene, President/CEO of NANA Regional Corporation, is the final member to be appointed to the five-member board, which is responsible for reapportioning the state house and senate districts following the 2010 U.S. Census. Originally from the Native Village of Deering, Greene is an Inupiaq who currently serves on the Board of Directors of the Alaska Federation of Natives. She has also served on many other boards and commissions, including NANA Services, Inc., OTZ Telephone Cooperative, Northwest Inupiat Housing Authority, Wells Fargo Bank, and Northwest Arctic Workforce Development and Education Consortium. I am confident Marie Kasannaaluk Greene will be a great asset to the board as they develop the new district lines

ers of each branch of government make appointments to the redistricting board, in a specified order, and each of the four judicial districts in Alaska must be represented on the board. Greene resides in the Second Judicial District, which encompasses the Northern and Northwest regions of the state. She will join Albert Clough of Juneau (First District) and John Torgerson of Soldotna (Third District), both appointed by Governor Sean Parnell; Robert Brodie of Kodiak (Third District), appointed by Senate President Gary Stevens; and Jim Holm of Fairbanks (Fourth District), appointed by Speaker of the House Mike Chenault.

ALASKA STATE COUNCIL ON THE ARTS APPOINTMENT

Governor Parnell appointed Roy Agloinga and reappointed Benjamin Brown, Theresa John, Aryne Randall and Gail Niebrugge to the State Council on the Arts. The council, which aims to enrich the cultural life of Alaskans, encourages and supports excellence in the arts by providing opportunities for Alaskans to experience the arts, by promoting the practice and enjoyment of the arts in Alaska, by guiding the development of the arts throughout the state, and by providing technical assistance and services to artists, arts organizations and arts supporters in Alaska. All members of the State Council on the Arts are appointed to public seats.

Agloinga, of Nome, is the current Chief Administrative Officer of the Norton Sound Health Corporation and is the co-organizer and founder of Tupagvik Inc., a non-profit corporation. He formerly served as the mayor of the Village of White Mountain as rural affairs coordinator in the Anchorage Mayor's office, as tribal affairs director for regional non-profit Kawerak, Inc., and as a public information specialist for the University of Washington. I wish Roy Agloinga on his new appointment best wishes in promoting Native art in Alaska.

NEW STAFFER IN BARROW Earlier this month, Interior Secretary Ken Salazar held a town hall meeting in Barrow, which the Dept. of the Interior says was meant to gather information on issues important to the North Slope. The meeting was open to the public, but the department denied requests for a teleconference. At the conclusion of his trip to Alaska, Salazar held a press conference to discuss issues in the North Slope and summarize his trip through Alaska.

Due to the short notice of Salazar's surprise trip, I wasn't able to attend either of the meetings in Barrow or Anchorage. However, I am making progress in having staffers available when events and meetings such as this arise during interim as well as to be available to our constituents in the proximate region.

Our newest staffer who will be joining us beginning October 1st is Nina Patkotak of Barrow. Nina grew up in Golovin and lived in Nome for several years when she and her husband Hugh worked at Olson Air Service. They have been living in Barrow since 1993 to operate Olson Air Service. Nina and Hugh have six children, one son and five daughters, a granddaughter and twin grandsons. She currently serves as president of the Golovin Native Corporation Board of Directors. She has been with the board intermittently since 1993. Nina will join our staff for the rest of the interim period. Welcome aboard Nina!

ANCs choosing to participate in the 8(a) program would have to be managed by individuals who are socially and economically disadvantaged. Under the program's definition, socially disadvantaged individuals have been subjected to racial or ethnic prejudice or cultural bias because of their identity as members of a group. African-Americans, Hispanics and Native Americans-Indians, Eskimos, Aleuts and Native Hawaiians are considered to fall under this group.

Altogether, McCaskill proposed seven overhaul points that are designed to put a multi-million dollar Native corporation on equal footing with minority-owned businesses run by a single proprietor.

A year-long probe into whether the no-bid contracting has benefited both U.S. taxpayers and ANC shareholders, and whether violations were widespread resulted in McCaskill's draft legislation that she plans to introduce to Congress next month. Since she didn't consult with the Alaska delegation, the Missouri senator will most likely get an earful from Sen. Mark Begich. According to The Government Executive magazine, Begich blasted the bill as poorly conceived and criticized McCaskill for failing to consult him before proposing it. He also showed disappointment that McCaskill has not taken up the invitation to come to Alaska and meet with Alaska Native corporation leaders to get a first-hand impression.

In Alaska, the Alaska Native Contractors Association and several Native corporations formed a group called "Native 8a Works." As part of the contractors' association, Bering Straits Native Corp. is part of the group. BSNC CEO Schubert said that all of McCaskill's seven points would be troublesome for BSNC. Schubert said that capping the value of the contracts would be unfair. "Basically, the $3.5 million or $5 million cap applies to a sole proprietor owner of an 8(a), but we have over 6,333 shareholders and many thousand shareholder descendants now who benefit from the revenue we create under our 8(a) contracts," she said.

She said that capping makes sense for a single business owner concerned only with his or her own profit, but not a large Native corporation trying to pay out dividends to thousands of shareholders. BSNC shareholders and their children, she said, benefit from shareholder dividends and scholarships that are paid out through the Bering Strait Foundation. As an example, Schubert said before BSNC engaged in 8(a) contracting, the corporation donated around $50,000 to the Bering Strait Foundation. Last year, BSNC could bump up its contribution to $200,000.

Schubert added that BSNC consolidates its revenue and it's hard to say how much of the 8(a) dollars earned flow into the corporation's growth, operation and reinvestment, and how much is paid out to the shareholder. "But we were able to recently pay out $2.34 per share, and that marks a significant positive change," Schubert said.

While Schubert agrees that more accountability is needed to successfully keep the 8(a) program going, she says it's not fair that only Alaska Native corporations are singled out. "I'd like to see if the largest defense contractor in Senator McCaskill's state, the Boeing Corporation, is providing a good value and honest service to the American taxpayer," Schubert said.

Territorial guardsmen saluted

By Tyler Rhodes

With proud salutes and basking in the glow and applause from a crowd of supporters, six veterans of the Alaska Territorial Guard received long overdue recognition Monday.

At a ceremony held at the Alaska National Guard Armory in Nome, Conrad Oozeva, Winfred James Sr., Franklin Okitkun, Francis Rivers Sr., Vincent Tocktoo and Laban Iyatunguk received certificates and medals honoring their service in the guard that was assembled to protect Alaska from the threat of invasion during World War II. Also honored, but unable to attend the ceremony, were Allen Ahnangnatoguk, Jacob Ahwinona, Clarence Irrigoo, Clifford Tom and Alex Oyoumick.

In addition to recognizing the men who served, the ceremony on Alaska Day also served as the official unveiling of a statue in front of the Old Federal Building honoring the territorial guard. The statue, one of several installed throughout the state, is a result of work conducted by the Alaska Native Veterans Association.

The association was able to receive more than $100,000 in state funding to place the statues in Nome, Anchorage, Fairbanks, Bethel, Juneau, Kotzebue, Nenana and Point Barrow. Alaska Native Veterans Association board member Harry Fields was in Nome for the

Unalakleet elects Middy Johnson to NSEDC board

Brevig Mission Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board seat election to be held Nov. 16

By Laurie McNicholas

William (Middy) Johnson won Unalakleet's seat on the Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board of directors in a runoff election Oct. 12, defeating incumbent Frank Katchatag by seven votes. Johnson received 112 votes compared to 105 for Katchatag.

In the election for the NSEDC board seat held Oct. 5 in Unalakleet, Katchatag led three other candidates with 92 votes, but received only 38.8 percent of the total vote. NSEDC requires that candidates receive at least 40 percent of the votes cast to be elected to the board, according to an advertisement the corporation placed in the Sept. 16, 2010 edition of The Nome Nugget.

Candidates in the runoff election were limited to Katchatag and Johnson, who finished second with 76 votes in the Oct. 5 election. Art Ivanoff received 46 votes in the Oct. 5 election (not 43 as reported in the Oct. 14 edition of Nugget), and Charles Degnan tallied 23 votes.

Middy Johnson previously served as Unalakleet's representative on the NSEDC board from October 2004 to April 2006, when he resigned before his three-year term expired to take a position as manager of NSEDC's fish processing plant in Unalakleet. At that time NSEDC's policy prohibited board members from serving as employees of the corporation. Johnson stirred controversy by appointing his brother, Paul Johnson, to replace him for the remainder of his three-year term as Unalakleet's board member. The NSEDC board allowed the appointment to stand rather than callor a special board seat election in Unalakleet. In October 2007 Paul Johnson ran in Unalakleet's regular election for the NSEDC board seat and was defeated by Katchatag.

Middy Johnson resigned as manager of NSEDC's Unalakleet fish processing plant last August to take the top job with the Native Village of Unalakleet. He subsequently filed as a candidate for the Unalakleet board seat in the NSEDC election held Oct. 5.

The Brevig Mission city council has scheduled a special election on Nov. 16 to choose a representative of its community for the NSEDC board, according to City Clerk Allen Okpealuk. He said the election originally slated for Oct. 5 was not held because the city's copier ran out of toner and ballots could not be printed.

Drunken break-in ends with a ride to jail

By Tyler Rhodes

An apparent alcohol-fueled decision to break into Milano's Restaurant in Nome's Old Federal Building (Bering Straits office building) landed a trio of young suspects in jail late last week.

Police were called to the restaurant around 6:20 a.m. Oct. 15 on a report of a burglary in progress. According to the criminal complaint filed by Nome Police Officer Ian Koenig, he and Officer Mike Yant found Logan Mosquito, 19, and Justin Ahkinga, 19, standing in the restaurant while a juvenile was trying to climb into the building through a broken window in the restaurant's main door. According to the complaint, the two young men fled farther into the building upon seeing the officers.

Police reported arresting Mosquito as he tried to flee the building from its southeast door. Ahkinga reportedly again retreated into the building after also trying to exit the southeast door. He was ultimately apprehended at the building's south door. The report noted a strong odor of alcohol on the breath of both men.

The damage to the building inflicted by the intruders was limited to a couple of doors and windows. Ryan Im of Milano's said one beer from the restaurant was taken and consumed, and the cash register had been tampered with but not opened. The window of the restaurant's main entrance had been broken out. A window in the door connecting the Sound Off: Equity in health care access essential for all Alaskans

By Susan B. Andrews and John Creed

KOTZEBUE—The phone rang at about 9:30 on a Thursday evening in mid-September.

It was a nurse from Mt. Edgecumbe High School in Sitka.

Our son Trevor had been vomiting all day in sick bay.

"We'll be bringing Trevor over to the emergency room shortly," the nurse explained. "We're concerned he'll get dehydrated.'

Not three weeks before, Trevor and his twin sister Deirdre had stepped on the afternoon jet in Kotzebue—their windswept, treeless hometown in Northwest Arctic Alaska-heading for freshman year at Mt. Edgecumbe, nearly a thousand miles across the state in Southeast

As we did with their older brother and sister before them, we sent our 14-year-old twins to Mt. Edgecumbe to broaden their educational hori-

The school nurse characterized the transfer as a routine precaution. Indeed, Trevor might even get sprung soon enough to return to school and cross-country running practice the next day.

But a physician at Sitka's tribal hospital, Southeast Alaska Regional Health Consortium, soon dashed those hopes.

"We're going to keep Trevor overnight and run a CAT Scan in the morning," she said, as we listened on speaker phone.

Our daughter Tiffany, soon be returning to college, flung open her bedroom door as the doctor described Trevor's condition.

"You'll be alright, Trev," we assured our son.

After we hung up, Tiffany started sobbing.

The next morning, we emailed Tom Pennington, a former colleague in Kotzebue and now an education professor at University of Alaska Southeast in Sitka. We recounted the doctor's prognosis-Trevor's condition likely wasn't a typical school-related bug.

The following morning, a surgeon called to say the hospital was preparing Trevor, with our permission, to remove his appendix immediately, before it bursts.

We cannot describe the frustration that even if we had tried, we could not have traveled to Trevor soon enough.

Meanwhile, the admissions director at Mt. Edgecumbe heard about Trevor's plight and rushed to his side, where she would stay before and after surgery, later bringing him books, balloons and a milkshake.

She later told us by phone: "Trevor looked up at the doctor with those beautiful blue eyes just before surgery and asked, 'When am I going to be able to run again?"

That evening Tom Pennington emailed an update: "Just got back from the hospital. Ol' Trev is looking SO MUCH BETTER than earlier today. He's lost that green color and now looks like a pretty healthy guy. He's smiling, talking, and seems pretty darn good."

Tom also sent a photo of Trevor resting in his hospital bed, taken while talking to us on his cell phone after the surgery.

"Worry not, he's doing well," Tom reassured us. "I'm proud of him. No whining, no complaining, and polite to a fault." The following week in Kotzebue, we recounted Trevor's ordeal around

"It's lucky it happened in Sitka and not Kotzebue," one local resident told us. "He may not have made it otherwise."

Maniilaq Health Center in Kotzebue can perform neither surgery nor CAT Scans.

Even a medevac flight to Anchorage might not have saved our son's

Disconnect

A mob mentality is a dangerous situation, and when it's on the national level we should be afraid. It seems that folks who feel threatened by social change have entered a distorted reality disconnect. The anger and rage of the Tea Party Republicans is going to be hard for mainline Republicans to control.

The TP can be scary because their beliefs have no basis in reality. The TP lives in its own reality. The facts that an expert believes something makes the TPs disbelieve it, and the more facts that support the truth, the more the PTs believe the opposite. They could be trampled by a galloping glacier and still not believe it happened. They insist global warming is a leftist hoax and evolution never happened, science be damned. They would rather believe Delaware's Christine O'Donnell's witch wonkery. (Thanks, Delaware, for showing us that Alaska isn't the only state with whackos.) The more the TPs are shown to be wrong, the more they believe they are right. How can reason

How will the Grand Old Party handle this? How will they get past the anarchistic zealots who hate every kind of government, want to tear down everything we've worked for in modern times and have no coherent alternative to the programs they want to destroy? Perhaps it is time for thinking Republicans to move forward and vote with the Democrats. -N.L.M.

State of Alaska in the news

Compiled by Diana Haecker Reporter detained by Miller security guard

Alaska Dispatch editor Tony Hopfinger was arrested by Republican senatorial candidate Joe Miller's security detail during a campaign event in Anchorage. Hopfinger had pressed Miller for an answer on the details of his resignation from the North Star borough and was subsequently accused of trespassing. The security guards handcuffed Hopfinger and once Anchorage Police showed up, he was released. An Anchorage prosecutor is now looking into the case, whether Hopfinger should be charged with trespassing at the public event or if the security guards should be accused of assault.

Incumbent Senator Murkowski called on Miller to apologize. The Alaska Democratic Party demanded that gubernatorial candidate and governor Sean Parnell repudiate the "outrageous so-called citizens-arrest.'

Leading up to the confrontation were requests from the online publication Alaska Dispatch to obtain files shedding light on the circumstances under which Miller was released from work as a part time attorney for the Fairbanks North Star Borough. Miller stood accused of having used borough computers to attempt an overthrow of Republican Party chair Randy Ruedrich.

As the documents didn't come forward, the Alaska Dispatch filed a lawsuit against the Borough. The Anchorage Daily News and The Fairbanks News Miner also filed a separate lawsuit dealing with the same matter. The suits assert that certain personnel documents are public under Alaska public-records law. "The borough's refusal to release the requested information constitutes both an interference to be informed and the electorate's right to truthful and full disclosure of information relating to a political candidate," wrote attorney John Burns in the News-Miner's lawsuit. Another Alaska media outlet. Alaska Newspapers Inc., said it a statement that it is supportive of the Alaska Dispatch's, Fairbanks News-Miner's and the Anchorage Daily News' effort to obtain information regarding Joe Miller's employment at the Fairbanks. ANI's statement said,

"We join in the call for Miller to release his employment records. After all, he is seeking to represent Alaskans in the US Senate.

Voters have the right to know how he worked as a government official so we can make an informed decision at the polls." Last week, former Fairbanks mayor Jim Whitaker came forward confirming that Miller used borough computers in Fairbanks for his own political purposes in 2008. Whitaker said that Miller was disciplined in writing for violating the borough's ethics policy. Miller repeatedly told reporters he has been the victim of "lies and innuendos" but last week, announced that he wouldn't answer any more questions about this or any other personal matter.

Berkowitz has unlikely ally on gas line

Democratic gubernatorial candidate Ethan Berkowitz and Republican Bill Walker signaled that they would work with each other on an all-Alaska natural gas line. Walker ran as a Republican gubernatorial candidate but was defeated by incumbent Sean Parnell in the primaries. AP reports that Berkowitz had written Walker, telling him the two shared a sense of urgency for advancing a line, and a vision for developing one on Alaska's terms.

Federal moratorium on oil drilling lifted

Interior Secretary Ken Salazar last week lifted the suspension on deepwater exploration in the Gulf of Mexico, but the decision did not allow offshore drilling in Alaska. Governor Sean Parnell said the Arctic moratorium would violate federal law and vowed to proceed in the state's lawsuit against Salazar to open Alaska's outer continental shelf to oil and gas exploration. On Monday, a U.S. District Court judge has agreed to accelerate the timetable for resolving the lawsuit.

A decision is expected by the end of the year. US Senator Lisa Murkowski said that officially lifting the moratorium on deepwater exploration in the Gulf of Mexico is a small step in the right direction, but it falls far short of resolving the regulatory uncertainty that continues to cost jobs and weaken America's energy security. Murkowski said that a while the administration takes steps to improve safety, it should also provide a predictable and stable regulatory environment for America's energy producers.

Democratic Senator Mark Begich also expressed his frustration that Salazar's announcement didn't mention Alaska, where clear guidelines about offshore development in Arctic waters remain unsettled. Environmentalists also expressed frustration. Earthjustice, NRDC, Northern Alaska Environmental Center, Oceana, Pacific Environment, Inupiat Community of the Arctic Slope, REDOIL, The Wilderness Society, Native Village of Point Hope, Center for Biological Diversity, Alaska Wilderness League and Defenders of Wildlife denounced the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management, Regulation and Enforcement's draft supplemental EIS and called it a hasty and incomplete draft environmental impact review. They said that while Sec. Salazar lifted the ban on offshore oil drilling, Alaska waters would be at even greater risk as incomplete environmental assessments continue to emerge from the Alaska BOEMRE office.

Lawsuit against health care reform goes ahead

A Florida judge has allowed a lawsuit against the federal health care law to go ahead. Alaska is one of 20 states that filed suit over the federal law and its mandates for states to increase their Medicaid programs and its requirement that individuals purchase health insurance. Judge Roger Vinson said there were constitutional issues involved and set a hearing date for December 16. Governor Sean Parnell said he welcomed the judge's conclusion.

DOT pushes a Yukon River corridor to Fairbanks

By Sandra L. Medearis

State Dept. of Transportation planning personnel visited Nome Oct. 13 with a road show for folks interested in a plan to link Nome to the interior Alaska-Canada Highway system. The 400-500 mile road would hook up half a dozen villages along the scenic resource-rich route that would put Fairbanks within about a 600-

DOT/PF officials met with about 20 citizens at Old St. Joe's Hall and met with some opposition as they presented lay out maps showing preliminary choices for routes. The project is still a twinkle in the determine-the-interest category.

The study encompasses the area west of the Dalton Highway, north of the Yukon and lower Tanana River basins, and south of the Brooks Range.

The legislature provided a million dollars to study the project. No money exists in an account to fund the road.

In 2008, DOT&PF contracted with the engineers DOWL/HKM to analyze potential construction of the road. At its current milestone, that study shows four suggested routes and the impediments and plusses of each. The study came out in January. Engineers on the project are shopping it around to villages that would feel the impacts to get opinions. Steve Titus, DOT&PF Northern Regional Director said the goal was to use the study to recognize a corridor that would promote resource and community development.

Resources and economic activity have been identified and corridor routes evaluated to access the resources and communities.

"While evaluating routes we are taking into consideration the migratory patterns of wildlife, subsistence culture and technical construction challenges," Titus said.

A proposed northern route would open up the Ambler mining district for jobs and a $27.5 billion in resources at a projected cost of $2.1 billion, according to the study. A southern route would cost the most, $3.2 billion and open up Donlin Creek mining area. A couple of alternatives run along the Yukon River. The projected cost of these would be $2.9 and $2.6 billion.

The Western Alaska Access Planning Study selected one of the river routes as the most favorable and dubbed it the Yukon River Corridor. This corridor is approximately 500 miles long, roughly parallels the Yukon River for much of its length, and has an estimated total project cost of $2.3 to $2.7 billion, or $4.6 to $5.4 million per mile. It would leave Elliott Highway near Manley Hot Springs, 160 miles from Fairbanks and parallel the river on the north as it goes westward by Ruby, Nulato, Kaltag and turn northward at Unalakleet, going by Shaktoolik, Koyuk and join the Seward Peninsula road system with a bridge over the Niukluk River at Council.

The WAAPS study says benefits to the Yukon River Corridor route include:

- Lower passenger transportation costs
- Lower fuel delivery costs · Lower freight and mail delivery
- · Lower mining and resource devel- opment costs · Lower energy and power infrastructure costs
- Increase in jobs, income and access to services

Titus said the Yukon River Corridor had fewer environmental and land ownership impacts. The northern route would serve fewer people and communities; the southern route would have greater environmental and habitat impacts.

This month, DOT planners and engineers traveled Western Alaska with the proposed maps and information. Last week the DOT/DOWL team held public meetings some of the towns potentially affected by the road: White Mountain, Koyuk, Elim, Shaktoolik, Unalakleet and Nome. Other villages that could be affected by the Yukon River Corridor include at least Tanana, Ruby and Nulato. A report stemming from the comment period will be due in May. What comes next will depend on cost and other issues combined and public input.

While many have dreamed of a road connecting Nome to the rest of the state, some at the meeting did not think the idea so hot, based on the preliminary study. Others doubted the road would ever be built, but some hoped it would to bring supplies into Nome at lower cost. Engineers said with money in hand and permitting hurdles crossed, the road could be built, oh, say, in roughly six years. The favored route crosses the Yukon River and other rivers or streams, meaning many expensive bridges. The corridor crosses 185 miles of wetlands, 135 miles of rolling terrain, and 65 miles of mountainous terrain. Nomeite Sue Steinacher, speaking up at the meeting, said that collecting input from the public who did not have all the information on environmental and social impacts of the road was premature.

"We don't have the whole story," she said. "I don't believe the road is being built to benefit people. It is being built for resources. We need to look at all aspects, how the region would look in 20 to 30 years. We need to get more of the pie so the feedback is more balanced.'

The study did look at environmental issues, a representative of DOT Planning Department said. They mapped wetlands, caribou grazing and stellar eider habitat, but did not put these items into the onehour presentation.

Pearl Johnson noted that the study carefully outlined parks and nature preserves, but did not consult villages about food sources in the areas. "For the breadbasket areas, there is no color [on the map]." Johnson said. "People in the village are minimized."

Additionally, she wanted to know how archaeological sites would be protected. DOT representatives said that if the project went to the design stage and environmental impact studies, once the route was settled, archaeological issues would be in-

New Nome school board members take the helm

By Tyler Rhodes

The Nome Board of Education bid adieu to one veteran member and seated three who were newly elected at its Oct. 12 meeting.

While the plaque acknowledging her service had not yet arrived, departing board member Kirsten Timbers received a thank you and hug from Board President Gloria Karmun. Citing plans to attend graduate school, Timbers opted to not run in the October municipal election to retain her seat.

Karmun then turned her attention to the three new members who won the contested races for board seats, administering the oath of office to Barb Amarok, Betsy Brennan and Marie Tozier. Amarok had been serving on the board for the past few months after being appointed, Brennan has served a previous term. This is Tozier's first stint as a board member.

With the seating of new members, the board organized its leadership anew, retaining Karmun as president. Brennan had nominated board member Barb Nickels for the position, but the two were outvoted by Karmun, Tozier and Amarok. Amarok was voted as vice president over Brennan. The votes for vice president were split along the same lines as those cast for president. Tozier was elected treasurer.

The board also welcomed Jeffrey Rose as this year's student representative. Rose gave his first report to the board without the aid of written notes and assured members he would have time for the meetings since he scheduled his classes to minimize homework this year.

District's books look good

The board received a detailed report from the district's auditors, Mikunda, Cottrell & Co. The firm's Eric Campbell traveled to Nome to present the findings to the board and walk them through financial details for the last fiscal year. "It's a clean audit all around," Campbell told the board.

The report showed the district bringing in more than $9.7 million in revenues for the past year, contrasted against nearly $9.1 million in expenditures. The report also showed a general fund balance of nearly $1.7 million for 2010 compared to nearly $1.4 million in 2009.

In news regarding this year's budget, Nome Public Schools Superintendent Jon Wehde reported a student count of 662 on the day of the meeting. The count is particularly important in October since it is the time when the state conducts its student census to determine the amount of funding each school receives. The district has based its budget on a student count of 657.

Districts base their budgets in the spring on a projected student count for the fall. A few years ago, Nome's fall count came up drastically short requiring significant cuts to staff and programs after the school year had already started. Wehde said he believes this year's count should hold.

Elementary principal report

Nome Elementary School principal Dave Keller informed the board that Nome Preschool is no longer participating in the district's early childhood education program which placed a grant-funded teacher at the school.

"That's a real shame," Karmun said, asking Keller to approach the preschool about reconsidering. "Don't accept no. Approach them again. They need those services," she said.

Funded through a state pilot program, two district-employed teachers work in Nome to offer pre-kindergarten education. Both teachers are now working at the Kawerak Head Start program. Last year there was a teacher both at Nome Preschool and Head Start.

The state funding for the program will end this year. Board member Nickels commented that the teachers would only be available if the state were again to offer the grant money. Keller countered that the program could continue, insinuating that the district could find other ways to fund the teachers outside of state grants.

Keller also noted that curriculum mapping was ongoing at the school. The process examines the curriculum in the school for gaps, repetition and opportunities for collaboration between staff members, among other elements.

The principal will also participate in training dubbed the Alaska Administrative Coaching Project. The state-funded program, for which Keller applied and was accepted, will initially train on teacher evaluation.

Keller also briefed the board on the salmon fish tank project being conducted at the school. Teachers Nikki Scherer and Matt Slingsby have received training in using the tanks to raise salmon. Keller said the school will compare notes with the high school and share information through the new Promethean smart boards in use at both schools

Nome-Beltz principal report

Nome-Beltz Principal Steve Gast discussed the current numbers in regard to discipline at the junior high/high school. Gast said 90 students have received detention since school started and 44 have had to serve an in-school suspension. Of those serving the in-school suspension, Gast said some have had to only be isolated from one particular class while others have spent larger portions or full days away from their regular classes. Many of the detentions have resulted over issues such as tardiness or gum-chewing, he said. Gast said 10 students have served out-of-school suspensions on a range of one to 10 days.

He said none of the disciplinary measures have been in response to violence or weapons brought into the school. He said there is some bullying that occurs at the school and he and his staff have taken a tough stance against it. "I think we're doing a really good job with discipline in the building," he said. "I think the attitude is good in the building."

Gast lauded the efforts of Nome-Beltz Assistant Principal Carmen Russo and what he said was an even approach to discipline. "There's no question right now that this person or that person was treated differently," he said. "It's not an issue because of the work she is doing." Gast junior high and Elizabeth Herzner for the high school. Junior high English teacher Lynn DeFilippo lauded Ongtowasruk for her thoroughness and sense of humor. DeFilippo read a poem Ongtowasruk had written for her class. High school English teacher Caleb Weaver cited Herzner's energy and willingness to participate in class and extracurricular activities. Despite her busy

Johnson thanked the board for allowing a delegation from the district to travel to Kennewick, Wash., to see how the district has improved, and maintained, its students' reading scores. "It was a really valuable experience, and we're excited to bring a lot of that information back to the board and staff," she said.

also praised Russo's initiative for a positive-incentive program at the junior high.

Gast also reported on an early-intervention team at the high school that works to identify students who may be struggling either academically or emotionally, and aims to get them back on track. "It's an early way to be proactive and not reactive," he said.

Gast said clubs will be starting again at the high school in a few weeks, but noted that the Rachel's Challenge program will not be continued this year in response to a question from Nickels. Gast said weak interested from teachers was part of the reason the program was discontinued.

Students of the month

Assistant Principal Russo presented September students of the month Shannon Ongtowasruk for the schedule, Weaver said Herzner had the highest grade in all of his English classes.

Odds and ends

Wehde reported that the district will be purchasing a new oven to replace one that no longer functions at Nome Elementary School. "We thought it would last the year, but it is really just beyond repair," Wehde told the board. Wehde said the new unit will cost more than $6,000 and will be the same as the ovens used at the high school.

JROTC instructor Master Sgt. Kevin Knowlton gave an update on his cadets' activities. He said a flag retirement ceremony will be held Oct. 23 at 2 p.m. at Nome's East End Park. "We will dispose of those flags in a very dignified manner," he said. Knowlton said flags in need of disposal could be dropped off at the VFW or brought to the ceremony.

Third-grade teacher Liz Korenek-to ask what could be done to provide later bussing service from the high school/junior high campus back to Nome. NEC currently provides tutoring services three days a week at the school for junior high students, transporting them in their own van. She said improved transportation offerings could allow for more days of tutoring or perhaps an after-school swimming program.

Marsha Sloan, also of NEC, approached the board to request that the district aid students in their course planning efforts to ensure those seeking the state's new performance scholarships will have taken enough of the required classes to be eligible. Eventually the new state program will require students to have four years of math and science classes, in addition to other required courses.

Two hundred ninety-five swimmers representing 14 high schools showed up at Palmer High School for the annual Valley Invitational Swimming and Diving Meet, October 15 -16. Seven of those swimmers were Nome-Beltz Nanooks. Only Cordova had fewer swimmers than Nome. Palmer and Kenai had 34 swimmers each.

Nathan Blandford, Kaylene Evans, Devynn Johnson, Miranda Murphy, Nick Morgan, Jake Stettenbenz and Zach Sullivan make up the Nome-Beltz High School Swim Team. Nathan, Nick and Zach are returning swimmers from last year. Kaylene, Devynn, Miranda and Jake are new to High School Swimming.

Preliminary races in all events occurred on Friday, October 15. The meet started at 10 a.m. and did not finish until after 4 p.m.. Warm-ups started at 8 a.m. so it was a long, full day.

Three Nanook swimmers qualified for events in Saturday's finals. Devynn qualified in the 200 yard Individual Medley (50 yards of each of four strokes: butterfly, backstroke, breaststroke and freestyle) and she qualified in the 100 yard breaststroke. Jake qualified in the 200 yard Individual Medley and Nathan qualified in the 100 yard freestyle.

In the finals each swimmer improved his/her time compared to their time in the preliminary heat, decreasing their times by 0.5 to 2.5 seconds and moving up one place in each event.

for finals. However, only the top six times from the preliminaries get scored. Our qualifiers were not among the top six finishers in their respective preliminary events so our team did not score any points.

All of the swimmers who had times from last year's season achieved faster times at this meet. The new swimmers now have times to use as a guide and for seeding in future meets.

Brian Blandford provided great support as a chaperone, driver and general good sport. Jake's mom and sister traveled to Palmer to cheer the team. Several Nomeites currently in the Anchorage area also showed up at the pool to cheer and encourage the swimmers: Taylor Romenesko, Billie Cosca, Aggie Blandford and her friend Tom, Dawson Kauer, and Jenell Johnson and her friend Robert.

The next meet will be the Regional meet for our area. Regionals take place in Fairbanks, October 29 and 30. McAdams brings his message to Nome

By Tyler Rhodes

Before the Aug. 24 primary election, there were likely few people in Nome—and around the state outside of Sitka and Southeast—who knew who Scott McAdams was.

That all changed for the Democratic nominee for U.S. Senate after the Republican primary upset of Joe Miller over Lisa Murkowski and Murkowski's subsequent re-entrance into the race as a write-in candidate. The media circus that has ensued has thrust the three-way race and its candidates into the spotlight on a state and nationwide scale.

McAdams traveled to Nome Saturday for a quick tour and a chance to meet area voters. He also saw the visit as a chance to speak on issues rather than the spectacle of the campaign itself. "I think we've gotten the wrong kind of exposure around this race," McAdams said during a car ride to tour the Banner Wind Farm just north of Nome. "I'd like the exposure to be on: What is our vision for this state? What will sustain us? What will be the basis of our next great economic expansion, or the next great chapter of our history? And there's nothing about that."

While there is a bit of irony in McAdams' lamenting the limelight that has given him a broad platform to air his views, he was eager to speak about anything other than issues surrounding the spelling of "Murkowski" or Miller's dealings with the press. With issues taking center stage, McAdams shared his thoughts on renewable energy, the federal stimulus and health care bills, the role of federal funding in Alaska, the gas line and several other topics.

As Nome resident and wind turbine technician Bob Hafner drove McAdams, a campaign worker and a reporter to the wind farm, the candidate said Alaska should serve as a leader in the development of renewable energy. McAdams wants to use a portion of federal royalties garnered from leases on federal lands to establish a fund for renewable energy projects. McAdams said the funding plan would dovetail into his vision of weaning rural Alaska off expensive diesel fuel to fulfill its energy needs. "Basically, in a nutshell, it's using a project like ANWR as a cash machine to help convert 150 stand-alone utilities to either partially or fully renewable," he said. "I think Alaska can become the next Silicon Valley of renewable energy if we made it a matter of political will. And I think we could use our oil wealth as a bridge to get us there."

Speaking on the possibility of a natural gas pipeline, McAdams said he would back whichever proposed route would eventually bring the gas to market, whether it be contained within the state or cross through Canada to the Lower 48. He said if any route were to be developed, he would advocate for a take-off point in Fairbanks to provide gas and jobs to the Interior community. "We've been talking about a gas line in this state for 40 years. I certainly don't want to wait another 40 years to bring our resources to market," he said. "It's looking more and more to me like an all-Alaska gas line may be our only choice. But I'm not one of these guys that is absolutely committed to either one."

Federal funds welcomed

With Miller in the three-way race, an advocate of drastically reduced government, federal funding has loomed large in the campaign. McAdams is not shy about his willingness to work to bring federal funds back to Alaska from Washington, D.C. He listed receiving federal funds for infrastructure development in the state as one of his top priorities. "I think that Alaska is a young state and, as a matter of equal footing, it has every right and should have every expectation for federal investment, just as every other western state once received help in development from Washington, D.C.," he said.

In that vein he believes a proposed

In that vein he believes a proposed road linking Nome to the state's highway system has some merit. "I think it would help us bring our natural resources to market in a more efficient way. I also think it would help to reduce the cost of living throughout the whole corridor of the road," McAdams said.

In regard to the larger issue of federal funding as a whole, McAdams said the government has a role to provide a foundation for its citizens. "I don't believe this baseline, this foundation of an economy, is something that the invisible hand of the free market will produce," he said. "When you think about reliable transportation, affordable energy, functioning public works infrastructure and an educated populace, these are all things that are a traditional function of government."

8(a) contracting

Another area of government spending currently under the microscope concerns Alaska Native corporations and their ability to receive no-bid federal contracts. With the contracting program in the crosshairs of some in Congress, McAdams said he feels there is room for improvement in the program, but that he also supports the Native corporations. "I think the wealth that's been generated through things like the Small Business Administration's 8(a) program have added capacity to our corporations. When you look at the acumen that has come to Alaska, the Alaska Native people are positioned to be leaders in commerce and industry throughout the rest of this century," he said. "My biggest concern with the 8(a) program, and with our corporate model in general under [the Alaska Native Settlement Claims Act], is not enough of those dollars and opportunities have trickled down to our villages and small towns."

To help those villages and small towns, McAdams also said more needs to be done to aid tribes. "We need to redouble our efforts to empower our federally recognized tribes. The tribe has a mandate to provide services to its citizens. The corporation has a mandate to provide profits to its shareholders," he said.

On the hot-button issue of subsistence, McAdams said he sup-

On the big bills

In regard to the large-scale federal legislation passed during President

Obama's term, McAdams said Alaska has benefitted from the stimulus bill, pointing to Nome's new hospital under construction as a result. "If I have an opportunity to help develop this state through part of a national infrastructure investment bill, I'm going to do that," he said.

On the federal health care legislation, McAdams said he believes the bill is not perfect, but would want to see it improved rather than repealed, as is called for by many Republicans, including his opponents.

McAdams' stay in Nome was brief, arriving on the morning flight and out on the afternoon jet. In his short visit, he was able to visit the new hospital construction site, tour the wind farm, attend a meet-and-greet session at the Polar Cafe and make a quick stop at a walk to support those who have dealt with cancer.

Port commission seeks grant for high mast causeway lighting

By Laurie McNicholas

The Nome Port Commission unanimously adopted a resolution to pursue a Denali Commission grant for a high mast lighting project at the causeway during a meeting on Oct. 13. The motion was based on a presentation by Garth Howlett of PND Engineers during a two-hour work session preceding the meeting.

Howlett agreed to modify drawings prepared in 2007 by PDC Inc. Engineers of a 140-foot high pole, one for the city dock and one for the West Gold dock, by adding a third foundation between the two lights, updating fatigue criteria, revising the pile design from one 48inch pile to four smaller piles so a relatively small crane and impact hammer can drive down the piles, and update the cost estimate for the project.

The deadline for the 2010 Denali Commission Roads and Wa-Projects funding terfront tion will be presented at a council meeting on Oct. 25.

recognition of the ATG veterans and the unveiling of the statue. He said it took seven years to bring the project to fruition.

Also on hand for the ceremony was state Director for Alaska Veterans Affairs Verdie Bowen who served as the guest speaker for the event. Bowen gave a short history on the assemblage of the guard to protect Alaska's expansive coast and islands against attack from the Japanese from 1942-1947. Bowen recounted how Major Marvin "Muktuk" Marston gained the following of more than 6,300 volunteers to form the ATG. "As Maj. Marston went from village to village, he had 100 percent enrollment in the Alaska Territorial Guard," Bowen said. "Ever single person in every single village stood up and said, 'I will fight."

The ATG consisted of volunteers ranging in age from 12 to 80 years old. While the guard was predominantly made up of men, a few women also filled the ranks. The guard was given old uniforms and World War I era rifles and were tasked with being the eyes and ears of the military along the coast.

Bowen said the soldiers also built huts along travel routes, stocking them with food and supplies. The guard members also rescued downed Russian pilots, Bowen said.

After the six gentleman were presented their medals and certificates, the ceremony moved from the National Guard Armory to Front Street at the Old Federal Building where the statue is on display. With the six veteran soldiers front and center, two cadets from the Nome-Beltz Junior Reserve Officers Training Corps removed the camouflage tarp covering the statue. Bathed in the glow of the late-afternoon sunlight, the statue depicts a parka-clad soldier with his rifle. An accompanying sign commemorates the ATG and acknowledges artist James Grant, Rep. Scott Kawasaki, the City of Nome, Lynden Transportation, and Bering Straits Native Corp. The City of Nome provided funds for the statue and BSNC allowed it to be placed on their Front Street property.

THUMBS UP (above)—U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski gives a thumbs-up to Nomeite Bob Hafner after the two chat as Murkowski campaigned on the street corner of Bering and Seppala Oct. 12. Murkowski brought her campaign to Nome to support her write-in candidacy in the Nov. 2 general election.

Murkowski asks Nome to support write-in effort

By Tyler Rhodes

Criticized for waging a passive campaign in the Aug. 24 Republican primary when compared to the race's eventual winner, Joe Miller, Sen. Lisa Murkowski appears to be holding little back as she wages an improbable write-in effort to keep her job after the Nov. 2 general vote.

Battling a cold and fighting for her political life, Murkowski stood in the cold with sign-toting supporters Oct. 12, waving at the passing traffic along Bering Street in Nome across from Anvil City Square. While Murkowski is hardly a stranger in Nome, the campaigning on the corner three weeks before the general election could be seen as a sign of just how much work she has ahead of her if she is to emerge the victor from the three-way scrum for her senate seat.

Murkowski suffered a surprise defeat in the primary by Miller, a Tea Party-backed candidate who aggressively pursued the Republican nomination for the seat. Rather than accept defeat, Murkowski eventually mounted a write-in campaign to join the race with Miller and Democratic nominee Scott McAdams, the mayor of Sitka.

Murkowski is a familiar face in Nome and in the region, making several trips a year to the area. She has garnered the support of Alaska Native corporations and organizations, and outscored Miller in the region during the primary election. In an interview Oct. 12, she argued that the loss of her seniority could deliver a crippling blow to rural Alaska. "These eight years of seniority that I have built allow me not only the most senior spot on the energy committee, but a seat on the appropriations committee, she said. I move up five chairs on the appropriations committee this year. That's hugely significant for us as we try to respond to the needs that we have in this state. If either Miller or McAdams were to gain office, Alaska would have the least senior delegation in the entire United States Senate."

Murkowski said that seniority is vital in making sure Alaska receives the federal support necessary to develop its resources and economy. "Mark [Begich] is just three-year, two-year senator, and to have a member join him that has even less seniority than that will kick us down the road in terms of our economic opportunities, kick us down 10 years," she said. "I don't think that we can afford losing that kind of time."

Energy issues rank high

Murkowski said she feels her biggest accomplishments and largest challenges left to address revolve around energy. She said she is proud of her work on legislation to lay the groundwork for natural gas pipeline from Alaska's North Slope and an act to accelerate the conveyance of land to the state and Alaska Natives. "We can't develop them if we don't have title to them, so that was hugely important," she said of the lands act.

Murkowski said more needs to be done to reduce the cost of energy in rural Alaska. "When you have communities where close to 50 percent of a family's budget is going for their energy costs, that is not sustainable," she said. "So in a state where we have more energy potential from different sources, whether renewable or nonrenewable, to know that we have the highest energy costs of any state in the nation, it confounds the mind to think we are in this situation." Murkowski proposed setting aside funds from traditional oil developmentspecifically from the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge, if it is ever opened—to help finance the development of renewable energy sources. "When we open ANWR, as we should, we take 50 percent of the revenues from that revenue source and we put those revenues that come from this non-renewable resource, oil, and we put it towards facilitating the build-out of our renewable resources," she said.

Hobbled by its scale of economy, Murkowski said Alaska should be the testing ground for renewable energy projects. "We should be the pilot project for renewable energy projects in this country. Because if you can make a project pencil out in a state like Alaska where our energy costs are higher than anywhere else in the country, it can work," she said. "We've got to figure out how we build down to scale and it's going to take some capital investment."

Murkowski said the key to successful renewable energy projects in Alaska is figuring out how to allow the rest of the nation benefit from the work done here. "It can't just be something that just helps the Nome region. If we can take this concept and make it portable to the rest of the country, everyone stands to gain," she said.

8(a) contracting

On other topics of interest in the region, Murkowski reiterated her support of Alaska Native corporations and their use of a Small Business Administration provision to gain no-bid contracts from the federal government. She said efforts by Sen. Claire McCaskill, D-Mo., to strip Alaska Native corporations of their special status within the program are misguided. "The efforts now led by McCaskill will effectively pull the rug out from under the progress that has been made," she said.

Murkowski noted, however, that the contracting program should not be immune to scrutiny. "I believe that we should never be afraid of enhancing any government program. We should never be afraid of accountability. We should always demand transparency," she said. "And I have encouraged the ANCs, look from within. Do a little self-policing. Figure out what you think the reforms need to be, and help us in making the program even better and more effective. I have supported the 8(a) program, but I have told folks, I don't support it unconditionally."

Stimulus missed the mark

Murkowski also spoke of her views on the federal stimulus legislation, which she believes did not succeed in its goal to move the nation's economy out of the recession. "We are in the longest sustained period of unemployment since the Great Depression. So what did the stimulus do if it was supposed to keep our unemployment numbers low?" she asked. "It was a shortterm creation of government jobs that didn't create any wealth, that didn't create any new jobs. These are important considerations for us. That was a stimulus where we took dollars that we didn't have and spread them around to try and make a difference, and now, two years later, we're looking to see where the difference was made."

Murkowski said a more appropriate role for the government in trying to spur the economy is to create an environment where private sector growth can occur. "I think so much of this comes back to a stable taxing structure," she said. She said many businesses are holding back on expanding for fear of new regulations and the potential elimination of tax cuts. "This whole uncertainty is causing great anxiety," she said.

HEY JOE, SHOULDN'T YOU CHECK WITH THE VOTERS BEFORE YOU ORDER THE DRAPES?

On Sept. 29, Joe Miller was in Washington, D.C., collecting money from the very insiders he likes to bash. Over the course of the evening, he sent a series of tweets thanking his Senate "colleagues" and chatting about buying furniture and finding a house.

Whoa, Joe. The election's not for another month. Maybe you should let Alaskans decide who's heading to Washington before ordering your name plaque.

Then, those tweets mysteriously disappeared from Joe's Twitter stream, but unfortunately for Joe, you can't take back something you already posted on the Internet.

Now that Native enterprise federal contracting is beginning to produce real value for Alaska's people, powerful forces in Washington, D.C. want to take it away. So does Alaska Senate candidate Joe Miller.

"Only in Washington, D.C. could companies be considered 'disadvantaged' and receive billions in no-bid contracts," Miller told the Anchorage Daily News.

Joe Miller doesn't know us very well - our traditions, our sacrifices, our way of life.

Lisa Murkowski does, which is why the Native community across Alaska has come together to:

The study did map and estimate how many miles of the Yukon River Corridor went through village and regional corporation lands, recognizing that there could be positive or negative impact on food sourcesfor example, more access for villagers but also more access for outsiders.

Some villages may not want to connect. That will be up to individual communities.

Other comment ran to looking at the road access for the future need to get food and supplies into Nome.

"This is about keeping costs down, Gary Hart said. "If costs continue to go up, like gas just went up half a dollar, people can't afford to live here. They're bailing out to Anchorage.'

Stan Morgan offered that he saw no benefits of a road within 200-250 miles from Nome.

Just go down the Yukon and end it there," he suggested. From there it would be an intrusion on private lands and Native lands."

Gary Hart was curious as to whether the team had looked at the cost differential in building a railroad instead of a road.

Titus said a railroad would cost four times as much.

sonal saga but because Alaska voters face perhaps their most important U.S. Senate election in history this Nov. 2, after which we will send Joe Miller, Scott McAdams or Lisa Murkowski to Washington to represent us.

The late Sen. Ted Stevens understood Alaskans getting their fair share from Washington to develop basic infrastructure in our young state, including in rural Alaska where a routine medical operation still can make the difference between life and death.

Some Alaskans might be wondering why rural Alaskans might seem "entitled" to improved services. Let us remind our urban Alaska friends, who just received their Permanent Fund Dividend checks, that rural Alaska has been creating wealth and bankrolling Alaska's wants and needs, rural and urban, for decades. Rural Alaska generously shares its resource wealth-from Prudhoe Bay to the Red Dog Mine to tourism, commercial fishing and more-with urban Alaska and the nation.

Let's choose the right senator to send back to Washington who will make sure our children, elders, and others throughout Alaska can depend, for example, on reasonably equal access to health care.

Got acne? Certain foods may make the problem worse

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Acne Vugaris is one of the most common adverse skin conditions affecting teenagers and young adults. The problem is often endured or ignored, as if it were a normal part of adolescence. However, if mismanaged, acne can become severe and disfiguring. An assortment of topical and oral medications is available to treat acne, but those who are affected often wonder if the condition can be improved by changing their diet. It turns out the answer is yes; reducing the consumption of certain foods may help control the symptoms of acne.

A review of high-quality research on the connection between diet and acne was published in the International Journal of Dermatology in 2009. The authors of the review found the most important foods to avoid are those with added sugar or simple carbohydrates and milk.

Acne also seems to worsen as people transition to a less traditional diet. For example, a study of Canadian Inuit back in 1974 found an increased prevalence of acne among teenagers who consumed higher amounts of soda (pop), processed foods, or dairy products.

Various studies show that milk consumption also seems to have a dose-related effect on acne. The more milk or dairy products teenagers consume, the higher their risk of developing severe acne.

Acne gets its name from a type of bacteria, Propionibacterium acnes, often found in the inflamed skin pores. Despite the presence of this bacteria and the appearance of a person with the condition, acne is not a skin infection, and it is not contagious.

At its most basic level, acne is a hormone problem. During the hormone-raging transition to adulthood, both males and females produce an increased amount of testosterone that, among other things, boosts the secretion of oil and protein in small glands located in the hair follicles of the face, neck, and upper trunk. The excess material blocks skin pores leading to the formation of small blackheads and pustules, or pimples. Blocked pores often become inflamed and, in their most severe form, can be quite large, painful, and disfiguring. Prolonged inflammation leads to permanent scar-

The interesting connection between acne and diet seems to be related to another hormone, insulin. We have known for a long time, that carbohydrates (sugars) in the diet stimulate the release of insulin from the pancreas. Insulin is important in balancing the amount of glucose in the bloodstream. Researchers have more recently found that insulin also induces the release of an insulingrowth factor that in turn increases the body's production of testosterone. This helps explain why high-sugar foods and milk tend to worsen acne.

So more sugar and/or milk in the diet means more insulin production, which means higher levels of testosterone, which means harder to control acne.

It is easy to recommend that young people reduce their intake of added-sugars, soda, and high carbohydrate processed foods like chips and candy or other junk foods. These foods are a major source of chronic disease in the United States, and it is no surprise that they also worsen adverse skin conditions like acne.

It is harder to make a recommendation about limiting dairy products, especially in young women. Dairy is an important source of calcium, which is vital for bone growth during the formative years of adolescence. Fortunately,

To the participants of the 2010 Teller Cultural Festival

This was the first time that White Mountain was able to send a dance group anywhere in over a hundred years. What a blessing to have participated in this year's event at Teller. Our 'Quyanaqpaq' goes to all who was a part of this experience. First the White Mountain Native Corporation for their financial support. The group that put the Happening in Tellere did an awesome job, the staff at the school was wonderful. We would also like to thank the drummer group who gave us lessons in drumming and participated in our performance.

Dorcas and Peggy from St. Lawrence helped us and gave us that much more confidence in performing that particular dance. The Golovin boys with their offer to help with the drumming, and Bernadette with her ideas was also helpful. This was an experience that we hope to repeat not once or twice, but often. We look forward to next year's Cultural Event!

Last but not least we wouldn't have made it to Teller without our drivers: Honuck Lincoln, Mike and Joey Simon, Connie and Andy Peterson - Quyanna!

there are many calcium-rich foods that do not stimulate the production of excess insulin. These include dark green leafy vegetables, salmon, and nuts.

For people with acne, unhealthy high-sugar foods like chips, candy, and pop should be limited, and ideally eliminated from the diet all together. If acne remains hard to control, then milk and dairy product consumption should be reduced while transitioning to other healthy sources of calcium, including supplements if needed.

There are many medical treatments for acne that may be safely used in conjunction with dietary measures. Most doctors treat the condition in a step-wise fashion starting with easy-to-apply topical medications and progressing to oral antibiotics in severe cases. Consider speaking to your provider about available options if dietary changes and over-thecounter remedies fail to control

SITE INVESTIGATION/DESIGN ENGINEERING FOR UTILITY MAINTENANCE/RESPONSE EQUIPMENT STORAGE & PERSONNEL WORK FACILITY NOME, ALASKA

SOLICITATION OF INTEREST TO PROVIDE PROFESSIONAL DESIGN ENGINEERING AND TECHNICAL SERVICES

The City of Nome through its component unit, Nome Joint Utility System (NJUS), is the recipient of a State of Alaska Community Development Block Grant and NJUS is seeking professional and technical services for the purpose of site investigation/design engineering for a utility maintenance/response equipment storage and personnel work facility.

NJUS generates and distributes electricity utilizing diesel generation and operates water-sewer utilities providing service to the greater Nome area. NJUS desires to complete design of a multi-use equipment, storage and personnel work (offices) facility which will allow for amalgamation of ancillary facilities, provide additional inside storage for response equipment and supplies, and reduce operating costs by incorporating the use of waste heat from the power plant. The investigation will also include consideration of additional space to potentially include incorporation of multi-use storage of other community public works snow removal and street maintenance equipment.

Design of the facility will be from ground-up to final design and construction drawings, including geotechnical investigation of a site to determine suitability and foundation development. The proposed new facility will utilize waste heat recovery systems and will include design for potential other energy efficiency technology. General requirements to be incorporated will initially be provided to result in conceptual layout drawings before proceeding to final design.

The work to be performed is subject to the requirements of Section 3 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1968, as amended 12 U.S.C. 1701u (Section 3). The purpose of the Section 3 is to ensure that employment and other economic opportunities generated by HUD assistance or HUD assisted projects covered by Section 3, shall, to the greatest extent feasible, be directed to low and very low income persons, who are recipients of HUD assistance for housing.

Selected firm(s) must be licensed and qualified to do business in the State of Alaska. Selection will be based on, but is not limited to, prior successful facility design in similar climates, soil conditions and qualifications of personnel.

Interested parties should submit a written statement of interest by October 29, 2010. Include qualifications of individuals to be associated with the project, descriptions of previously designed facilities and references. Selection is anticipated to be made not later than December 1, 2010. Geotechnical Investigation and Design to be substantially complete by May 15, 2011.

Nome Police Chief John Papasodora said Oct. 15 that the subjects were to be arraigned that day depending on their level of intoxication. Apparently they required a little sobering up as Mosquito and Ahkinga were arraigned the next day, Oct. 16. Ahkinga was released on his own recognizance while Mosquito was held on $3,000 bail.

A preliminary hearing for Ahkinga is slated for Nov. 5. Mosquito has a preliminary hearing scheduled for Oct. 25.

Howlett reviewed plans for the East Dock Fender Repair project with Port Commission members at the work session preceding their meeting. The commissioners approved PND's draft design and cost estimates for the project at their Sept. 23 meeting pending receipt of a final plans for the project from PND.

The Port Commission's proposed response fees for the Guardian and proposed design and cost estimates for the East Dock Fender repair project also will be presented to the Nome Common Council on Oct. 25.

Other topics discussed by Howlett and Port Commission members at the work session Oct. 13 included the Nome Barge Ramp repair and expansion, harbor floats and extending the causeway.

Harbormaster's report

Harbormaster Joy Baker provided the Port Commission with the following summary of activities and operations at the port facilities. Cargo into the causeway totaled approximately 2,084 tons in September, with 100 tons shipped outbound and 93 tons through to villages. Gravel exports slowed to about 6,920 tons. Inbound fuel totaled 800,160 gallons with 53,083 gallons transferred out and 15,656 gallons loaded over-side between barges.

One cruise ship, eight research vessels, the NOAA ship Fairweather and the USGG Cutter Acushnet docked at the causeway in September. Crews of the Fairweather and Acushnet took shore leave in Nome.

Activity at the barge ramp in the harbor slowed somewhat in August, with only village cargo loaded outbound. Fishing vessels and gold dredges kept the floats in the small boat harbor busy. The south and east sheet pile docks were occupied by landing crafts, tugs and barges. Cargo for the inner harbor totaled 3,658 tons with 343 tons outbound and 670 tons through to villages. Fuel delivered into the harbor totaled 611,115 gallons.

The halibut fishery continued through September with a total catch of 107,377 pounds. Two sailing vessels and one rigid hull zodiac stopped in Nome after traveling through the Northwest Passage.

Public Works Department personnel cleaned out the boat yard at the Industrial Park and hauled in fill to level the yard after numerous years of settling. Crushed rock was brought in for surfacing, and the yard reopened for storage by Sept. 15.

September invoicing totaled just over $186,799 for all facility operations.

Scott McAdams is Rural Alaska.

Scott McAdams is a big guy from a small town. Scott is Sitka's mayor, a former commercial fisherman, a coach, an educator and an adopted member of the Dakl'aweidi (Killer Whale) clan. His children are enrolled members of the Sitka Tribe of Alaska.

Raised in Petersburg, Scott's small town values of hard work, community volunteerism and respect for all of Alaska's people can be seen in his school board service, family activity and football coaching.

Scott knows that rural Alaska is where our resource wealth is found. He understands and supports subsistence. He's the only candidate for U.S. Senate who opposes the Pebble Mine.

Paid for by the Alaska Democratic Party. Authorized by Scott McAdams for US Senate.

Scott can win.

A vote for Scott is a vote for Rural Alaska. In this three-way contest, he is the only candidate who will fight for Rural Alaska and can win this election.

HANDFUL OF HOOPS—The opening act of Great American Circus' dazzled the crowd with a performance that spun dozens of hoops all at once.

Circus turns Rec Center into a big top

By Tyler Rhodes

Armed with crossbows, hula-hoops, acrobats and a Michael Jackson impersonator, the Great American Circus roared through Nome Oct. 21, putting on displays of agility, strength and balance.

The Nome Recreation Center served as the big top for the traveling show, which made Nome its last stop of a month-long tour through Alaska. For three shows in the Gold Rush City, acrobats dangled and spun from hung silk ropes, a man jumped rope while balancing atop a board that was precariously stacked high atop a rolling cylinder, and a pair of brothers seemed to defy gravity as

Utility looks to get in the fuel business

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome Joint Utility System may be delivering fuel to Nome residents along with water, power and sewer services.

The Nome Common Council voted unanimously Monday to direct the city's attorney to draw up a change in the local law to allow utility fuel trucks to roll.

The action came after NJUS Manager John K. Handeland reported that his board voted a similar proposal when it met Oct. 19.

This month diesel fuel oil and gasoline prices at the pumps went up to nearly $5 a gallon, two for $10.

"The [utility] board was a little concerned that fuel prices were going higher when we'd seen a reduction in ours, but the pump prices were going up" Handeland told the council.

According to Handeland, information form the city's attorney assured him, NJUS and the city moving into the fuel business would be legal.

"As far as competition with private business goes, no problem,' the attorney said. For example, look at busses competing with taxicabs. The council only needs to amend Chapter 15 of the

AFN charged with political overtones

By Diana Haecker

The 2010 convention of the Alaska Federation of Natives Oct. 21-23 brought to Fairbanks more than 4,000 Native delegates from all over Alaska for the annual ritual of meeting old friends, catching up on news and discussing the most pressing issues facing Native peoples in the state.

This year's theme was "Village Survival!" and it was meant as an affirmation of resilience in the face of high costs of living, exorbitant energy costs and other severe challenges of living in rural Alaska. Tied to surviving in the village, many said, are issues of subsisting off the land, hunting and fishing to feed the family. Hunting and gathering, the most ancient of rights, is complicated in Alaska by land ownerships issues, a dual federal-state management system and imposed restrictions that in some instances turn hunting and fishing into a federal offense or, at best, an act of civil disobedience.

Survival connects to subsistence, education and sovereignty

Subsistence dominated last year's convention and the theme carried forward into 2010. Last year, there was hope that the Secretary of Interior Ken Salazar would incorporate Alaskan viewpoints in his sweeping overhaul of the subsistence system. But this year, disappointed

Dear Editor

The Alaska Federation of Native Inc. board of director's choice to cancel the debate for the US Senate's seat in Washington, D.C., for Friday afternoon is just another reason why this system needs to change.

The AFN Inc.'s board of directors (hand picked, not elected) chose to bring a resolution forward to the delegates of this year's conference to endorse the current Republican U.S.

Senator, Lisa Murkowski. People seem to think that they took this course of action to silence the Democratic candidate, Scott McAdams, who more than likely would've won the hearts and minds of many of the delegates.

AFN Inc.'s board of directors once again stymied the democratic process to give the people of rural Alaska the chance to listen and make their own judgment on the single most important election race this

Instead of asking the delegates that have gathered for the convention from every single corner of the state what they think and want, AFN Inc.'s board of directors chose what they think is good for us.

Thanks for nothing. Ryan Olson Anchorage, AK

Dear Nancy,

Excellent editorial last week, actually quite inspiring considering Tea-Liban Joe has a realistic shot at imposing his radical version of Miller-time on everyone.

You are absolutely right that people among us who are learned, perspective and sometimes enlightened must urgently recognize and act on reality.

We're all being corralled "again" like lemmings, intellectuals first, of course, towards the damned cliffs of despair. We are pushed and pulled and cramped and squeezed with little resistance and questioning - just stupidly waiting for the blindest, furthest back head lemming to spot paradise ahead of us in the distance.

While the GOP's starve-the-beast strategy has the beast they created cannibalizing them, you reluctant few have your chance to participate in and change history with little con-

What's Best for Alaska

It would be so great to have a senator with Alaska's best interest at heart. We've been subjected to biased political surveys that tilt so far to the right that they trip over themselves as they go 'round the bend. We've been slammed with TV ads paid for by outside interests we don't know and probably would not want to know. We've had spelling lessons instead of issues information. We've had polling place writein shenanigans. We've been treated as if we are dim-witted and can't see past the smoke and mirrors. We are told lies that when repeated often enough are still lies.

Sarah who thinks the U.S. constitution is a religious document? This election is critical for our political stability and sanity. Alaskans can drive a stake through the heart of the monster by voting for Scott McAdams for U.S. Senate and Ethan Berkowitz for governor. Do what is best for Alaska. - N.L.M.-

Who's the right person to represent Alaska in the U.S. Senate? We're obliged to exercise our privilege to vote this coming Tuesday. It's a responsibility to which we need to give careful consideration. Do we get involved in a Republican family feud? Do we go for the reactionary Tea Party-endorsed Republican Joe Miller, who wants to cut the rich guys' taxes and take away federal programs we have worked hard to obtain? Never mind Miller's personal abuses of the system. Do we do a write-in vote for Lisa Murkowski who is a standard conservative Republican who voted the party line against the stimulus package which funds Norton Sound's new hospital? Her own party dumped her for Miller and she has close ties to Nome. Her mother's baby blanket is enshrined on the wall at Old St. Joe's Hall. Do we vote for Scott McAdams, the moderate Democrat from Southeast who understands the needs of Alaskan communities located off the road system, away from Anchorage and the Rail Belt? McAdams is well grounded in the issues, communicates well and has an ability to identify with real

Mondays and Tuesdays quiet at the Board of Trade Saloon State board nixes BOT booze sales two days a week for four months

By Tyler Rhodes

Nome, and perhaps the state's, most infamous watering hole is again facing a series of closures by the state Alcohol Beverage Control board.

Board of Trade regulars looking to get a drink at the Front Street bar on Mondays and Tuesday will be out of luck for a few months. A settlement agreement between the Board of Trade and the state board approved in September requires that the bar not sell alcohol every Monday and Tuesday from October trough January. The bar was sanctioned for allowing a drunken person to enter and remain at the bar.

A sign in the window of the bar recently advised patrons that the bar is open for pull-tabs and nonalcoholic drinks on Mondays and Tuesdays. The sign also reminded—a bit ironically given the reason for the suspension—that you can have as many drinks as you can pay for the rest of the week.

The settlement with the state board was approved by a slim margin in a 3-2 vote at its Sept. 30 meeting.

The sanctions for the BOT are not the first for this year. At its February meeting, the state beverage control board unanimously approved a settlement agreement with the bar that resulted in a 10-day suspension of its liquor license and a $2,000 fine. According to Nome Police Chief John Papasodora, the cases leading to the sanction all centered on an intoxicated individual working behind the

The cabin is located along the Teller Highway across from the Alaska Gold gravel pits. The police received a call from Blodgett at 9:36 a.m. Sunday reporting the death. Nayokpuk's body has been sent to the state medical examiner's office for an autopsy.

Fuel prices attain liftoff

By Sandra L. Medearis

Nome's gasoline prices blasted off this month. Monday's survey of pump prices showed Bonanza Express gas at nearly $5 a gallon, priced at a timid $4.9999. Crowley's pumps price at its Nome-Teller Highway lagged at $4.94. The price for fuel did not reach for the sky, but did go up at both venders—Bonanza pump price for diesel oil matched its gas at $4.9999. Crowley diesel fuel matched that, also at 4.9999. The Nugget checked only the pumps this year to avoid the soft shoe on price quotes from vendors.

Those new prices offended Fred Moody, outspoken NJUS board member. It is high time—no pun intended, for Nome Joint Utility System to get into the fuel distribution business, he told other board members at the Oct. 19 regular NJUS meeting.

"I would like the manager to look into fuel distribution," Moody declared. "Can we sell fuel oil? When we go to the pump and pay $5 a gallon for gasoline and it doesn't cost $5 to get in here, it irritates me."

Moody made a motion to the effect that utilities manager, John K. Handeland look into having NJUS become an agent for fuel distribution. Board member Carl Emmons added a second and the motion scooted through unanimously

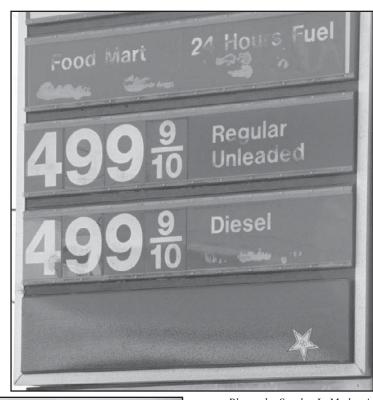

"If you want me to look into selling fuel oil, I'll look into getting into the business again," Handeland said.

The board discussed recent fuel price increases of approximately 50 cents a gallon by local vendors, while NJUS saw a reduction in price paid per gallon for this year's fuel, which ran at $2.562 a gallon (vendor price plus port fee).

The Nome Common Council has since followed up with a request for the City's attorney to tweak the municipal code to open the valves on NJUS fuel distribution.

In other business, the board passed a resolution accepting $5 million in funding through state Dept of Environmental Conservation to enhance Nome's water source. The grant will finance the installation of about 16,000 linear feet of new arctic transmission main from airport areas to the Moonlight Springs well field, including Moonlight Spur along Gold Avenue. Additionally, the money will fuel related work including the update of all electrical and monitoring control components and construction of an isolated chemical feed room at Beltz Water Treatment Plant. Add to that new piping installed under the Snake River crossing by horizontal drilling to replace old bridge-hung piping.

Ballot measure would send more to Juneau

By Tyler Rhodes

In addition to McAdams-Miller-Murkowski battle in the race for U.S. Senate, voters in the Nov. 2 general election are being asked to decide a ballot measure and two bond propositions.

The most sweeping in its potential effect is the ballot measure which asks voters whether Alaska's constitution should be amended to expand the Legislature by two Senate seats and four House members. If passed, the amendment would create six new legislative districts. The Legislature currently contains 20 senators and 40 representatives. The proposed change comes as the state's political boundaries are about to be redrawn as a result of the 2010 national census.

Each district is required to contain roughly the same constituent population. If the recent census shows a district losing popula-tion—which will likely be the case for many rural areas throughout the state-those districts would have to be drawn larger to encompass more people. Inversely, areas that have grown, like the Matanuska and Susitna valleys north of Anchorage, will likely be partitioned into smaller districts, geographically speaking. "Without any changes, in the upcoming redistricting process some districts will become so large and diverse it will be impossible for these areas to receive meaningful representation," reads the support statement in the state's election pamphlet. The support statement was offered by former Sen. Arliss Sturgulewski, former redistricting board executive director Gordon Harrison, and former Fairbanks North Star Borough Mayor Jim Sampson.

For rural House and Senate districts—which include most places in the state outside of Anchorage, the Mat-Su, Fairbanks and Juneau—the measure would most likely result in a sort of status quo. "I think they will stay pretty close [to the same size]," said Sen. Donny Olson, D-Golovin, said in an interview Oct. 26. The bill prompting the ballot measure emerged from the Senate Community and Regional Affairs Committee which Olson chairs. The additional six legislators will likely serve more concentrated areas that have seen growth, like the Mat-Su, while keeping rural districts from growing even geographically larger.

House District 39, in which Nome is found, currently sprawls from Wales and most of the Seward Peninsula all the way south beyond the mouth of the Yukon River and the communities of Scammon Bay, Hooper Bay and Chevak. The senate district for the region is even larger, covering the entire house district as well as the Northwest Arctic and North Slope boroughs. "I am fortunate because I have the ability to fly and only have some 50 or so villages," Olson said. He noted that District C, currently represented by Sen. Albert Kookesh, extends from the extreme southern end of the state to above the Arctic Circle. He said that district is so large that it is nearly impossible to travel throughout it to meet with constituents. "Our districts are going to grow so big...because of that people feel disenfranchised. They cannot access their senator or representative easily," he said.

Olson noted that since statehood, Alaska's population has nearly tripled while the size of the Legislature has remained the same. He said more legislators were added before statehood as the territory grew in population and budget. "There is a precedent as population and budget increases," he said. He also noted that Alaska has the smallest Legislature in contrast to states of comparable size.

Olson said a larger legislature helps thwart corruption by having more eyes to watch where the money is going. He also believes it aides in providing a more equitable distribution of government spending around Opponents of the measure mainly take issue with the cost of supporting the six new legislators. Writing the opposition statement in the state's election pamphlet, Rep. Carl Gatto, R-Palmer, points to new costs for everything from salaries and new offices to support staff and janitorial services. "This is an expensive scheme and in the end each of us will still have one representative and one senator," he wrote. "Sixty is plenty, end of story!'

The state Legislative Affairs Agency has pegged the cost of the new legislators at $2.34 million a year plus an additional $1.5 million to remodel space in the Capitol and office buildings in Juneau to make space for the new bodies.

Bond propositions

The first of the two bond propositions on the ballot asks voters to approve general obligation bonds to support the Alaska Housing Finance Corp. in issuing mortgages to qualified veterans. The bond limit for Bond Proposition A is $600 million. The second bond proposition, for $397 million, would finance several construction, design and maintenance projects for educational facilities and research projects around the state. Among the projects are a school replacement for Alakanuk ($46.5 million) in the Lower Yukon and additions and renovations of schools in Kipnuk ($49.9 million) and Kwigillinkgok ($32.1 million) in the Lower Kuskokwim. Also included are a new arena and athletic facility for the University of Alaska Anchorage ($60 million), a science classroom and laboratory at the University of Alaska Fairbanks ($88 million), and students housing ($16 million) and a career and technical education center ($14.5 million) at the University of Alaska Kenai campus.

CRASH SITE—The wreckage of Sen. Donny Olson's plane is seen a few days after the crash in September. Olson said the plane was removed from King Mountain using four-wheelers and other equipment.

Report issued on Sen. Olson's plane crash

By Tyler Rhodes

THE NOME NUGGET

The National Transportation Board has released an initial report on a Sept. 15 plane crash near Nome involving Sen. Donny Olson.

The report, citing information from Olson, concludes the crash occurred as he was making a 180-dgree turn about four miles away from Nome when his Cessna 310 collided with King Mountain. Olson, the pilot and only person on board, was able to walk away from the wreck uninjured. The crash occurred around 10:45 a.m. as Olson was approaching the Nome airport on a flight from Golovin.

In a brief interview Oct. 26, Olson confirmed he was making the turn after the weather closed in on him. He said when he had left Golovin earlier that day, the weather was better, allowing him to fly under visual flight rules. He said as he approached Nome the weather worsened, prompting him to request special permission to land under the VFR rules even though the conditions no longer permitted VFR approaches. Despite receiving permission to land, Olson opted to turn back in search of better weather. It was during that turn that the crash occurred.

Olson said he was able to walk down the mountain to the Dexter Road. Already jolted by the crash, Olson had a second scare as he walked down the hill. He said the fog increased as he was descending and in the mist he could make out a large object moving nearby. Thinking he survived the crash to only be eaten by a bear, Olson feared the worst. It turned out the large animal was a musk ox, which didn't put Olson completely at ease, knowing they can be aggressive during the rut. He said he was able to get by the animal and called for a ride to Nome once he got to the Dexter Road.

A report issued by the Alaska Senate Bipartisan Working Group on the day of the crash on behalf of Olson described the incident as a "a controlled landing on the tundra." Both Olson's account and the report by Larry Lewis, an air safety investigator with the Alaska Region of the National Transportation Safety Board, counter that statement. "We didn't find any evidence of an attempt to land," Lewis said.

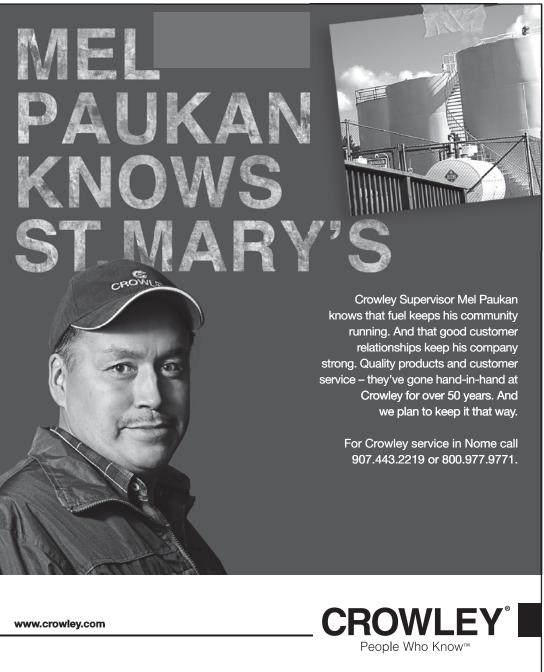

The wreckage of the plane, strewn over a couple of acres near the top of King Mountain, was removed from the mountain approximately a week after the crash. The plane appeared a complete loss. According to the NTSB report on the crash, the crash provoked a small fire. Lewis said the minor fire occurred after the plane collided with the ground. "It wasn't an in-flight fire," he said.

Olson said the plane was taken apart on the hillside and taken down to Nome using four-wheelers and even a small car that was able to drive up to the site. "I just want to thank all those people who stepped up and retrieved the airplane," he said.

Lewis said Oct. 22 he had filed his final report with officials in Washington, D.C., but it will not be official until he hears back from them.

P. O. Box 281 • Nome, AK 99/02 (Phone) 907-443-6600 • (Fax) 907-443-5349

Listed below are the prioritized actions that the City of Nome will undertake during the 2010-2011 snow season. These actions are meant as a guide and DO NOT commit the City to any course of action other than that which is deemed to be in the best interests of safety and City resources.

- I. During major blizzards and ground storms, City crews will stand by and only attempt to open streets as required in emergency situations.
- II. Once the storm has abated, every effort will be made to open fire lanes (one lane) on every street in town.
- III. Once fire lanes have been established, crews will begin to open major (school bus) routes to two lanes of traffic. Streets identified as priority are:
 - East and West 5th Ave. East 1st Ave. West 2nd Ave. West E Street East K Street Icy View Loop East N Street Steadman Street
- IV. Once major routes have been opened to two lanes of traffic, crews will begin opening the remaining streets to two lanes of traffic.
- V. Once all streets have been opened to two lanes of traffic, crews will systematically begin to widen, clean and haul snow to designated snow storage sites. Service areas will be rotated in order that all areas of town receive equal treatment during this clean up.
- VI. Sanding of select streets will be performed by ADOT. Other streets will be sanded when conditions warrant and resources allow.
- VII. The major snow storage for the City of Nome will be: The snow storage site located off the By-pass road.

Once again these plans are meant as a guide. We will take actions contrary to this plan as necessary. We urge citizens of Nome to help us keep the streets safe and usable. Some things that will help our efforts are:

- Cars should be parked off the rights-of-way as much as possible during the clearing and removal of snow;
- Obstructions (buildings, dog houses, snow machines, 4-wheelers, trash boxes, etc.) that prevent removal of snow should be moved farther on to private property if at all possible;
- Be alert to the area of town in which we are working and, if at all possible, keep parked cars and traffic to a minimum in these areas;
- Pushing of snow into the public right-of-way after a street has been cleared is discouraged.

After hours, on weekends and holidays, City crews will be on-call as needed. Due to the limited resources within the City, local contractors will be utilized to provide additional manpower and equipment as necessary. If you have any questions, please feel free to contact Public Works Dept. at 443-5653.

Thank you!

municipal code," Handeland said.

Handeland asked the council to tweak the law before he started the meter on the attorney's desk and spent money on planning and logistics. The council agreed.

"And could you put in a gas station too?" Councilman Randy Pomeranz asked. Councilwoman Mary Knodel also came out in favor of having the city's attorney draft up an amendment.

Two fuel companies currently deliver fuel in Nome and distribute at stations, Bonanza Express and Crowley Maritime. Alaska Cab Garage, a fuel vendor for years, has closed that part of its business.

Monday, a drive by the pumps showed Bonanza posting $4.9999 for both diesel and gasoline. Crowley's pumps on Nome-Teller Highway matched Bonanza's diesel price but sold gasoline for a nickel less at $4.9499.

Starting the meeting off, the council seated newly elected Josie Stiles and Jim West Jr., re-elected Oct. 5. Also sworn in by acting City Clerk Camille Ten Eyck was Police Officer Michael Yant who formally joined the Nome Police Department.

During citizen comment time, the council heard Adam Lust represent Nome Rotary in asking for the city to formalize the service club's relation with East End Park on East Front Street near Swanberg's Dredge. The city owns the land, but the park has been a Rotary Club project off and on for three decades since the 1980s.

"We've been there since the beginning. I feel we have an obligation to remain involved," Lust said. Lust chairs the Nome Rotary East End Park Committee.

The club built the shelter and picnic tables and installed the equipment that remains. This summer Rotarians put on gloves and went to work putting in hours and gravel to groom the park to launch various ideas—a playground, a walkway for birdwatchers, or other recreational uses. Rotary members have been working with other groups for support and financial backing.

The club just needs the go-ahead from the city, Lust said. Nome Rotary has been collecting seed money from fundraisers.

Councilwoman Mary Knodel asked the Rotary Club to come back with a plan for the park development.

In other business, the council:

• Adopted an ordinance making parts of the Snake River bank at Bel-parts of the Snake River bank at Belmont Point and Middle Beach-harbor area off limits for temporary structures and overnight camping from 10 p.m. to 6 a.m.

• Adopted an ordinance making it unlawful for owners of birds and animals to permit them to be outdoors at large or restrained within boundaries of Anvil City Square, Nome Elementary School grounds, or any playground owned or maintained by the city.

• Adopted an ordinance accepting the grant of right-of-way easement over Lucy's Way in Ivanoff Subdivision. The road has been constructed to city standards. The city will take over maintenance.

• Received information that there has been no concrete response from the state Department of Administration on the city's proposal to serve as government-to-government liaison with State of Alaska to permit sole sourcing construction of an a state offices rental building by Sitnasuak Native Corp. The council directed that a letter be drafted to follow up on the city's informational response to the state.

• Following an executive session voted a two-year contract renewal for Josephine Bahnke, city manager, according to Ten Eyck Tuesday morning.

Changes to subsistence regime rejected by AFN delegates

By Diana Haecker

When Secretary of the Interior Ken Salazar last year announced a sweeping overhaul of the Alaska subsistence management, he went on record to call the current dual state and federal management system broken. Salazar then promised to bring it in line with the mandate of the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act — granting preference to rural Alaskans — and follow both traditional and scientific best practices. The sweeping review that was announced by the end of August resulted in something that was wholeheartedly rejected by AFN delegates last week.

The crux of the matter lies in an unresolved conflict between the state constitution and the federal promise. By law, ANILCA promised a rural preference for the taking of fish and game for the federal lands in Alaska — more than 60 percent of the state. But Alaska's constitution guarantees that fish, wildlife and water be reserved for the common use of all Alaskans regardless of race or geography.

For over 20 years, the temporary dual management fix has caused chagrin to Alaska Native groups. The state manages subsistence on state and privately owned lands. Alaska Native Corporation land and other Native allotments fall under this category and are managed by the state.

With no indication that the state of Alaska will change its position and amend the state constitution to allow a rural preference, the AFN board pressed for changes on the federal level. AFN president Julie Kitka said in an interview during the annual convention that the current system in place wasn't meant to be permanent. "So, the problem is that for the past 20 years its been a temporary system," Kitka said. "It was not supposed to be permanent. I think the Secretary gets that. But as of now, they don't have the right permanent system in place. That's what's wrong. There isn't any hope that the state does a constitutional amendment so we deserve to have a program that responds to what our people want, not a temporary system that still is half-baked.

By the end of August, Salazar and the Secretary of Agriculture announced the findings of the review and their actions. Changes to the federal program include the addition of two rural subsistence users on the federal subsistence board, increased clout to the recommendations of the regional advisory councils and a review of the memorandum of understanding with the state, plus a review of current regulations governing customary and traditional uses and rural and non-rural determinations.

Also, Salazar appointed Tim Towarak to chair the federal subsistence board. The FSB runs the subsistence program and is comprised of the Alaska directors of the federal Fish and Wildlife Service, Bureau of Land Management, National Park Service, Bureau of Indian Affairs, the regional forester for the US Department of Agriculture and a public member. The problem for the rift between subsistence users and the board was, as Tim Towarak put it, "The board was run by grocery shoppers."

Comments regarding the review included that the board was not knowledgeable and not responsive to rural needs because of the lack of subsistence users on the board, and that state managers of fish and game exercise too much influence on behalf of non-subsistence users.

The AFN board was not happy with the secretary's recommendations, mostly with the actions he didn't take. Salazar said he could not redefine a priority for either "Native only" or "rural resident plus urban Native" in ANILCA. He also could not expand public lands defined under ANILCA to allow federal subsistence management on Native owned lands. Salazar said that those actions are outside his direct authorities.

While Kitka appreciated the appointment of Tim Towarak to chair the federal subsistence board, she also was cautious. "We are also very aware that the system that he [Tim Towark] is the co-chair of is broken and that the system is what's temporary. We hope that Tim in his role is able to educate the people in the department and to fix it correctly," Kitka said.

Towarak said that he hopes that the appointment of two Alaska Natives to the board will make a difference.

"I'm excited for the potential to improve the system," said Towarak. He said that the board meets four times a year and takes proposals that come through the regional advisory councils. Towarak has served in the governor's office under Tony Knowles and remembered the days when they tried to get the state legislature to amend the constitution. While this vote never came, Towarak said, "As there is no change in the constitution, the federal government is changing its management to enact a long-term plan.

Ideally, Towarak said, the real solution would be to get one management scheme. "The State of Alaska is in a good position for that and, to me, that would be ideal."

Towarak had to resign his AFN co-chair position to take the job on the federal subsistence board, as there would be a conflict of interest.

Asked what the position of the AFN board on the preferred outcome of the issue is, Julie Kitka said she hopes that the different departments and the White House would meet with Native leaders to come up with a regime that would meet the needs of Alaskan Native peoples.

Kitka said that she was dismayed that the input of AFN and other Native groups was not visible in the review. "During course of the secretarial review we spend hundreds of hours in many meetings all across the state, putting together people's best ideas," Kitka said. "We submitted timely and detailed analysis, but we've not felt it made into the process. We had two meetings pleading with him to accept these recommendations and so far we don't see our ideas coming into the review and coming out."

The resolution called for Congress to convene full oversight hearings on the drafting of new federal legislation to protect all Alaska Natives and other rural Alaskans in continuing their pursuit of food and nourishment for their families.

The intensity of the situation became clear when subsistence users from the upper Yukon and southeast communities of Yakutat, Angoon, Hydaburg, Saxman and Klawock testified of state and federal citations for subsistence hunting and fishing. In a letter from the subsistence chair of the Arctic Native Brotherhood wrote that law enforcers target subsistence users out of concern for dwindling numbers of salmon, whereas the commercial fishing industry gets a disproportionate allocation of the resource.

Earlier this year, ANB launched the Alaska Subsistence Defense Fund and Alaska Native Food Security Council with the mission to raise funds and to assist the Native community to defend its subsistence rights. The AFN resolution also called for an effort to look into legal options and to raise funds for Native Rights protection.

delegates signed off on a resolution rejecting the secretary's proposal as insufficient. While discussions on survival and subsistence took up a few hours on the convention floor on Thursday and Friday afternoons, the need for better educational opportunities for Alaskans and beefed up family and public safety also were touched upon.

Keynote speaker Gloria O'Neill, Cook Inlet Tribal Council president, stressed that education-not only for Native Alaskans, but all Alaskan children—is the key to thriving communities and ultimately village survival. She said that public education is in desperate need of reform and pleaded with parents to not leave it up to the government on the state and federal level, but to be actively involved in the education of their children. "We failed to take on the responsibility to educate our children," O'Neill said. She said that currently fewer than 50 percent of Native children graduate from school, and that those who don't are likely to live a life of poverty and welfare dependency. She suggested the creation of local schools and districts that put communities in charge of education.

Alluding to painful memories of elders who suffered education at the heavy hand of missionaries and residential government schools, O'Neill said her own grandmother had overcome challenging times. "We have the right to be angry for the past, but my grandmother had the resilience to turn it around and create something positive," O'Neill said.

During testimony on the theme of village survival, Albert Attla of North Pole said that he is of a community that died because of a state law that slashed funding for schools once their enrollments dip below 10 students. "When the school dies, the village dies," Attla said.

A few hours later, in the parking lot outside the Carlson Convention center, a sputtering travel trailer served as the mobile campaign head-quarters for Democratic senatorial candidate Scott McAdams, who invited delegates and the press for a campaign forum. About 30 people and reporters came and heard his take on issues ranging from education to subsistence, resource development and economic development in rural Alaska.

McAdams and his wife, Romee, were flanked and endorsed by Akiak Native leader Mike Williams, a Yupiit school district school board member. Williams said that he fully supports McAdams for his dedication to education. Williams said that he knew McAdams for years in his capacity as a school board member in Sitka as well as his involvement in the Alaska Municipal League. He also praised McAdams for understanding the role of tribes in government-to-government relations. The latter turned out to be a point of contention for tribal leaders as Native corporations under earmark legislation achieved tribal status, enabling corporations to engage in government-to-government talks with the federal government.

Good news, bad news coming from the feds

Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs Larry Echo Hawk was present to assert his open-door policy at the AFN convention. He said that despite last year's budgetary gain of his department, the Bureau of Indian Affairs is looking at budget cuts again. Echo Hawk acknowledged that much is left to be done in terms of public safety, education and economic development in Alaska. He touched on the subsistence review, which was flatly rejected by AFN leadership as insufficient, and said the Secretary of the Interior did all he could within the scope of his authority. "Broader action would need congressional involvement," Echo Hawk said. He said that the appointment of Tim Towarak as the federal chair of the Federal Alaska Subsistence Board was "significant."

The good news came next.

The crowd gave a standing ovation when Echo Hawk announced the hire of Kotzebue's Elizabeth Hensley as a policy adviser to him for said he would become more involved in the subsistence debate—something that he has not been actively working on. He also said that Hensley will help advise him on a vast array of issues ranging from land conveyances, duck stamps, trespassing, the epidemic of youth suicides, to concerns about off-shore drilling, inadequate education and housing opportunities as well as problems with alcohol and substance abuse.

Before he left, however, Echo Hawk got an earful from former state senator Georgianna Lincoln, a member of Doyon Ltd. Lincoln alleged that the federal park service and other federal agencies are harassing subsistence hunters and fishermen.

"The Department of Interior agents coming into our homes and taking away salmon strips is an embarrassment to the department, and I urge you to put this on top of your list and address this," Lincoln said.

Village survival testimonials

The annual convention took place this year in Fairbanks' Carlson Center, and thousands of delegates flocked to the city, occupying every one of the town's 2,200 hotel rooms.

Instead of the theme of "Village Survival!" some speakers said the theme should have been village prosperity. But testimony after testimony

WHAT DOES JOE MILLER HAVE TO HIDE?

ALASKANS WANT ANSWERS.

- "If he can't be honest about the 'petty issues,' why should Alaskans trust him with the big ones?"
- Anchorage Daily News
- "It is unacceptable and certainly not a winning strategy – to explicitly refuse to answer reasonable questions about oneself, and to disrespect the Alaska public."
- Open letter sent to Miller from 40 Republicans
- "It is difficult to believe at this point that even Joe Miller believes Joe Miller is the best person to represent Alaska in the U.S. Senate. His flawed character, his ethical challenges and his almost tedious tap-dancing around the truth would seem
- to make him a terrible choice.
 Anchorage Daily Planet
- "Joe Miller is not a victim of lies and innuendos. In the end he may be a victim of the truth and his own actions."
- Former Fairbanks North Star Borough Mayor Jim Whitaker
- "If he wins this election Joe Miller won't need a sense of humor. The joke will be on us for sending him to Washington."
- Michael Carey, host of APRN's Anchorage Edition

Joe Miller's refusal to answer questions about being disciplined for an ethics violation has reached new extremes.

First, his personal bodyguards arrested a reporter for asking pesky questions and then handcuffed him in a chair.

Then, Joe filed suit to punish his former boss for daring to speak out.

All this because Alaskans want to know why he was disciplined – and almost fired – for politicking on the public's time while working for the Fairbanks North Star Borough.

Really Joe?

Alaskans need a senator who will fight for our future instead of hiding from his past.

Write in Lisa Murkowski for U.S. Senate – and remember to fill in that oval.

SUBSISTENCE TESTIMONY (above)—President of the Native Village of Point Hope Caroline Cannon testified on the importance of the bowhead whales for Point Hope and the fear that offshore oil drilling could negatively impact the whales.

VILLAGE SURVIVAL (right, above)—AFN delegates were invited to post notes with the meaning of village survival to a board at the convention center in Fairbanks.

during open mic sessions from the convention floor described rural Alaska and the state of the villages as being in serious survival mode. AFN delegates spoke of the horrible rate of suicide among village teenagers, the high cost of living, the lack of jobs and the exorbitant cost of energy. There was added testimony of subsistence issues where traditional and customary use hunters and fishers are afraid that federal agents will take their catch away, and village survival sounded more like a desperate plea for help.

In her opening speech, AFN president Julie Kitka said the exclamation point behind the motto is not a misprint but rather a battle cry. "The traditional village represents the heart of our culture," Kitka said. She fired off a list of demands to the federal and state governments dealing with the gamut of issues, such as increased food assistance to far-flung villages to offset the price of transportation, energy support for renewable resource development, the stabilization of energy costs, eco-but they see adults around them getting drunk. They're told not to smoke, while the grown-ups smoke," Martin said.

He appealed to the silent crowd that all it takes to make a difference in a life of a self-doubting teenager is to hug them, acknowledge them and let them know that they are loved.

Andy Teuber from Kodiak said that collectively, adults are letting the youth down. "The violence they see compromises them to make good choices," he said. Other testimonials dealt with the health of the environment, for example protecting ground fisheries from commercial trawling, and the call for more jobs in the villages.

During the address given by the governor, Sean Parnell again picked domestic violence and sexual assault as his topic. Parnell reaffirmed the administration's crackdown on domestic violence and said that village survival is jeopardized if families are suffering from domestic violence, substance and alcohol abuse. He challenged all the men present to stand up and to pledge to protect nomic aid, coastal Arctic assistance for villages dealing with climate change and erosion and the subsistence policy review that fell short of AFN's expectations. "Where are the visionaries? Why has their response failed to meet the needs of our people?" Kitka asked the crowd.

Once the microphones opened to allow testimony from the convention floor, heart-wrenching stories emerged. Bill Martin with the statewide suicide prevention council told his own story of growing up in Kake and having little hope for a good future. "Kake was the suicide capital of the world," Martin said. "When I was a teenager, those were the hardest years in my life."

He told the crowd that at a recent suicide summit in Bethel, the youth told the adults that the grown ups are dysfunctional and expecting the impossible from the youth. "They [youth] grow up in a world of contradictions: they're told not to drink their women and children.

Parnell said that his administration aims to have 40 villages participate in marching through their communities for a "Choose Respect" event held in spring of 2011.

Politics

The convention's strongest undercurrent was of political nature. Delegates' fancy parkies and jackets were plastered with buttons stating, "Let's make history," "Yes on Ballot 1" and the names of political candidates for the U.S. Senate and governor's races. However, Joe Miller buttons were rare and although the Republican senatorial candidate was on his home turf in Fairbanks—evident by the amount of Joe Miller for Senate signs staked in people's front yards and businesses—he received only a chilly welcome inside the Carlson Center. Kookesh recognized Miller as being in the audience and asked him to stand up and wave. The reaction was indifferent at best, with only a few people clapping and faint booing heard from the back of the room.

The 2010 AFN convention took place during a highly politically charged time, two weeks before general elections. The noise of the race for the next U.S. Senator has drowned out the gubernatorial race between Republican incumbent Parnell and Democratic challenger Ethan Berkowitz, and left its mark on the convention that for the first time passed a resolution endorsing a senatorial candidate, namely Lisa Murkowski.

The endorsement came after a fiery speech by Byron Mallot, former AFN president, senior policy fellow at the First Alaskans Institute, and co-chair for Murkowski's write-in campaign. Mallot minced no words defending ANCSA corporations from verbal attacks made by Republican senatorial candidate Joe Miller. Without directly mentioning Miller's name, Mallot said that ANCSA was a bargain between the Native people and Congress. He said the corporations were meant to become engines to help grow the state. "And they Mallot said. "Our corporations bring hundreds of millions into the state." Mallot went on to defend the tall office buildings of ANCSA corporations that dot the skyline of Anchorage and said that they are expressions of pride in Alaska to roaring applause in the audience.

Mallot continued to fire up the crowd by saying that Miller—again without stating the name—called Alaska Native corporations special interest. "Some call it special interest, I call it an Alaskan interest," Mallot said to thundering applause.

"I will have nothing to do with him." Then Murkowski took to the stage, sticking to her report of achievements in Washington, D.C., and re-affirming her commitment to Native corporations in fighting Sen. Claire McCaskill's intent to kill 8(a) privileges to ANCSA corporations, American Indian and Native Hawaiian businesses.

After Murkowski's speech, Tim Towarak introduced a resolution to endorse write-in candidate Lisa Murkowski to the full house of delegates. The crowd enthusiastically waved signs with Murkowski's campaign motto "Let's make history" and answered "aye" to the question whether or not to endorse the sitting senator.

A full-on senatorial debate that was set for a one-hour timeslot on Friday afternoon was canceled. AFN president Julie Kitka said that the full AFN board decided to cancel the debate in order to allow more open mic time for delegates discussing the subsistence issue. "We have heard so much concern in the past, that people want to say their piece and as a result we opened up open mic sessions," Kitka said in an interview with The Nome Nugget. "They [the board] decided that the Senate race was already overexposed, [...] to collapse that and to allow for our own people to have more time to discuss subsistence." Kitka said that the board felt that the governors' race had been underexposed and therefore the gubernatorial debate was allowed to go forward.

In the arts and crafts pavilion, located in a separate heated tent structure outside the Carlson Center, mostly Native artists displayed their goods. Carvings, skin sewing, beadwork, paintings, handmade birch wood snowshoes, kuskpuks and handmade beaded and carved jewelry drew crowds of convention goers. This was where political candidates milled around to shake hands—like Democrat McAdams, who vowed to shake 1,000 hands during AFN.

On the final day of the convention, AFN delegates approved a slew of resolutions. The first resolution endorsed Murkowski; the second resolution called for action by Congress and the AFN to fully protect subsistence hunting, fishing and gathering rights for Alaska Natives. Other resolutions called for securing passenger transport to Little Diomede; a resolution demanding an investigation of the deaths of Alaska Native homeless people in Anchorage; a resolution endorsing the retention of Alaska Supreme Court Justice Dana Fabe; and a resolution to create an Alaska Native education advisory committee. Also, the body supported a resolution to Ballot Measure 1. This measure would amend the Alaska Constitution to increase the number of state legislators from 60 to 66 (see story on page 6).

Native leaders fear that rural areas will lose districts when the state is reapportioned because of population growth in other parts of the state. Expanding the size of the Legislature was viewed as a way to maintain Native representation.

It's a huge YES for Lisa.

The Alaska Federation of Natives (AFN) voted UNANIMOUSLY Thursday to endorse Sen. Lisa Murkowski's write-in campaign.

"You honor me and I am humbled. I will fight for you as long as I am able."
Sen. Murkowski told the hundreds of cheering delegates gathered in Fairbanks.

The resolution includes a lengthy list of Sen. Murkowski's support for Alaska Natives and Native issues, particularly critical problems like climate change, affordable energy, adequate health care and decent housing.

It concludes with the strongest endorsement possible:

"The delegates to the 2010 Annual Convention of the Alaska Federation of Natives endorsed Lisa Murkowski for the office of United States Senator."

Is it safe to take a medication after expiration?

By Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Imagine it is two o'clock in the morning and you have one of those aches that responds to ibuprofen; but the bottle in the cabinet expired five years ago. The store is closed. Is it safe to take the expired medication and, if so, will it work? The answer is that the drug is probably safe, but whether or not the medication will work is largely unknown.

By federal regulation, all pharmaceuticals must undergo stability testing and include an expiration date designating the duration of time the drug is expected to remain potent when stored under standard condi-

It is widely believed that many medications remain safe and effective for years after the expiration date, but the only significant research on the subject comes from an older study called the Shelf Life Extension Program. SLEP began in the 1980s when the U.S. Air Force faced the possibility of having to destroy enormous stockpiles of medications nearing expiration. The military asked the Food and Drug Administration to determine whether the shelf life of these medications could safely be extended. The question was not so much a scientific one, but economic. Could the military save money by

To date the FDA has tested over 300 drugs as part of SLEP. Surprisingly, most of the drugs evaluated maintain their stability well beyond the manufacturer's expiration date, some up to nine years later.

extending the time until a medication was deemed unsafe or ineffec-

No one knows whether or not this means medications in the civilian world would last this long. According to the American Medical Association, "There essentially are no reliable data on the clinical or fiscal impact of pharmaceutical expiration dates in the civilian environment."

It is important to understand that the stability of a medication is highly dependent on storage conditions. SLEP drugs were stored under optimal conditions where temperature and humidity was tightly controlled; a far cry from the conditions found in most home bathroom medicine

If you ask the AMA, the FDA, or the Pharmaceutical Research and

Manufacturers of America (PhRMA) whether a person can take a medication after the expiration date, the answer is an official, "No." In spite of the positive results from the SLEP study, the lack of data from civilian settings leads most national organizations to recommend against using medications after the manufacturer's expiration date.

These recommendations are not always easy to follow in rural Alaska where pharmacies, clinics, and convenience stores are not open 24 hours a day. Therefore Alaskans are often forced to take a more pragmatic approach relying on whatever medications are available at any given time.

Being proactive, however, may prevent unnecessary questions about whether or not a particular medica-

"A Man Named Barnabas" Pastor Mike Christian, Jr., River of Life Assembly of God For the Nome Ministerial Association

Saying it Sincerely

There is a man in the New Testament who is surely one of the most overlooked and under-recognized characters in the Bible. His name is Barnabas. What kind of man was he?

We are told that when the young, struggling church at Jerusalem needed financial help he sold his property and gave the income to the church. We are told also that on another occasion he and Paul took an offering at the church in Antioch and carried it to Jerusalem to help those who were left in need because of a famine.

Not only did Barnabas help with the financial needs of people, but he helped them in other ways as well. When the church in Antioch needed more leadership, Barnabas went to Tarsus and persuaded Paul to return with him

But there is another quality that Barnabas had that even overshadowed those. After Paul had been converted to the Christian faith and wanted desperately to meet with the Christian leaders in Jerusalem, they refused to see him. They were suspicious of him, afraid he might still be seeking to do them

Paul searched in vain to get someone to take him to the church leaders. But no one dared to take the chance. No one, that is, but Barnabas. Barnabas risked his all - his reputation and even his life - when he volunteered to introduce Paul to the church leaders. Barnabas reasoned that you should not hold a man's past against him when he had a change in heart.

Sometime later, when Paul was preparing for what is commonly known as the second missionary journey, he refused to include John Mark in his group. Mark had deserted Paul and Barnabas in the middle of their first journey and Paul held this against Mark.

But Barnabas was the type of person who dared to give a man another chance. So he separated from Paul and carried John Mark with him. He again risked his reputation to give a man another chance.

I have often wondered where the world be without Barnabas. There is a possibility that Paul would have never become one of the apostles and would not have been able to accomplish his great work. And there is a chance that John Mark would have turned back on his new Faith.

If that had happened, we would be much the poorer. For it was Mark who wrote the first recorded account of the life and teachings of Christ which we have. If you doubt how great the contribution of Mark is, you must remember that of the 666 verses contained in Mark's gospel all but 30 are copied by either Matthew or Luke in their works. Take away Mark's material and the material contained in the first three gospels would be little indeed.

When Paul needed a friend but didn't deserve one, Barnabas was there. When Mark needed a friend but didn't deserve one, Barnabas was there. There is always a need for a Barnabas. The world is a better place - and much richer - because of Barnabas. His kind is still needed today and will be as long as the world endures. May each of us step up and become a "Barnabas" in our world today?

tion will work when you need it most.

Regarding expiration dates on your medications, here are a few practical guidelines:

Carefully monitor medications that may be life-threatening if they were to lose efficacy. This includes medications like insulin, asthma inhalers, or epinephrine pens. Immediately replace any medications in this category.

Antibiotics and similar prescribed medications should only be used for the duration prescribed. Do not rely on left over pills from an old prescription to treat a new infection. The medication may be ineffective or may unnecessarily complicate further evaluation of the medical problem. See your provider if you think you need a new prescription.

Over-the-counter (OTC) medications should be checked annually and replaced upon expiration. Most over-the-counter medications, like acetaminophen (Tylenol) or ibuprofen (Motrin), will maintain their efficacy if stored in a cool, dry, and dark area tightly closed in the original container but should be replaced when expired.

Unused portions of expired medication may be disposed of in standard garbage receptacles, preferably in sealed containers after mixing with an inert substance like coffee grounds, sawdust, or kitty litter with the unused drug to make it less palatable to animals or curious children. Similarly, liquid medication should not be poured into sinks or toilets, but should be mixed with inert substances and disposed of in sealed containers.

they performed a balancing act that at times had one holding the other above his head. Even Olex the clown performed a few acrobatic moves as he drew laughs from the crowd.

Led by ringmaster Tuffy Nicholas, the circus had the classic look and feel of the form of entertainment that has been around for more than two centuries. While animal acts have been phased out as a practice of a bygone era, the modern circus still has elements that reach back to its early traditions. There was no lack of showmanship from all the sequinclad performers, and old-fashioned gags—like Olex's pants falling down—scored big laughs. Timeless acts that rely on human strength, balance and daring proved as entertaining as ever as the Nome audience oohed, aahed and applauded with each feat accomplished.

The crowd particularly reacted—with both nervousness and awe—to the display of husband-and-wife team Ross and Elisa Hartzell who put on a display with crossbows. The Rosses fired arrows within inches of each other and only a few feet from the audience. For a finale, the duo set up nine crossbows that once triggered set off a chain reaction that culminated with arrows piercing apples atop their heads.

The show was not without its touch of modernity—at least recent modernity—with its Michael Jackson tribute performed by Michael Kiss. The performer definitely had the look and moves of the late Jackson as he moon-walked and danced about the Rec Center floor to the classic song "Billie Jean." During the show's intermission, Nomeites young and old lined up for a photo with Kiss—for a small fee, of course.

The close of the third show marked the end of the tour for the troupe, which traveled to Anchorage, Juneau, Kodiak, Soldotna and Sitka, among other stops in the state.

KNOM pioneer Busch dies at 63

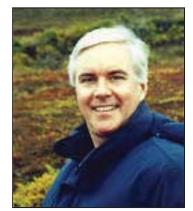

Tom Busch, the former general manager of KNOM radio, suffered a fatal heart attack Monday morning Nov. 1.

Busch moved to Nome in 1970 as volunteer chief engineer to design and build the radio station. Born in Philadelphia, he was a graduate of Boston College. In addition to KNOM, Busch worked as announcer and engineer for commercial stations WRYT in Boston, WLDB in Atlantic City, and KIAK in Fairbanks.

Busch served as KNOM's general manager from 1975 to 2005. He then resided in Anchorage where he focused on fundraising for the mission. Busch kept close ties to the station's regular operations; he regularly lent his expertise to engineering repairs and preventive maintenance at KNOM's facilities.

Busch and wife Florence, who was business manager for KNOM from 1989-2005, have two children, Katie and Steve, both grown.

Tom was an Extra Class amateur radio operator (call sign NL7H). He enjoyed computer science, astronomy, reading and wilderness backpacking and was in the process of writing his fourth novel.

In 2004, Boston College honored Busch with an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters degree.

Busch will be sorely missed. He helped to create and sustain KNOM in Nome. Nov. 1 was his birthday. Funeral services are pending.

Write-in list spurs court battle; count process could take weeks

Editor's note: The Nome Nugget will have full election result coverage in next week's issue. Results were unavailable with polls closing just as the Nugget went to press.

By Diana Haecker

The 2010 midterm election has drawn nationwide attention to Alaska's senatorial race as incumbent and writein candidate Lisa Murkowski tried to save her seat against Tea Party-backed Republican Joe Miller and Democrat Scott McAdams.

As of press time on election day, the results of the vote were unknown.

Faced with the unusual write-in campaign of a major candidate, the Alaska Division of Elections gave out material to polling places that has been contested by the leadership of the Alaska Democratic and Republican parties. Both parties filed a lawsuit against the Alaska Division of Elections, its director Gail Fenumiai and Murkowski, to stop the practice of providing lists with the names of write-in candidates. Once early voting began Oct. 18, the division offered

Mining firm Millrock Resources busy east of Nome

By Tyler Rhodes

While the future of the Rock Creek mine just north of Nome is in limbo, another mining firm is testing the waters—or the rocks, more accurately—east of Nome to see if larger-scale commercial mining is feasible. Vancouver-based Millrock Resources spent last summer conducting separate drilling programs east of Nome near Council and Bluff.

Teamed with large Canadian mining company Kinross Gold Corp., Millrock drilled 17 holes in the Council area at what it calls the Albion prospect. The company also conducted extensive soil testing in the area, tak-

Street on Friday, Oct. 29.

The Nome Police Department has asked residents to check around their property for any sign of Jeconiah Annogiyuk. The young Alaska Native man from Savoonga was reported last seen walking out of Nome's Subway restaurant and heading west toward downtown on Front Street. There has been no sign of him since.

Police say Annogiyuk had been drinking and was kicked out of Subway. Annogiyuk was reportedly stumbling as he left the restaurant. Annogiyuk is described as approximately 5'6" to 5'10" tall and weighing 140 to 150 lbs. He has a slight mustache and was wearing a brown hoodie sweatshirt, a black jacket, blue jeans and white shoes.

The police and search and rescue teams first issued an alert to look for Annogiyuk on Sunday. The search continued Monday with searchers on foot and a Bering Air helicopter making passes over the seawall and elsewhere in Nome to try to locate the missing man.

Searchers are asking residents to examine their property to check for Annogiyuk. They ask that people check around woodpiles, outbuildings, cars that may not be used often, under their homes and other areas where a person may lie down or seek refuge. Anyone with any information regarding Annogiyuk or his whereabouts is asked to call the Nome Police Department at (907) 443-5262.

Letters -

Dear Editor,

To the people around the Norton Sound —there is a problem with law enforcement not doing their job right! They seem to be only harassing people who have been to jail before. The ones that haven't— as in higher-class people — they seem to do nothing about it! We hear about other people breaking the law and they seem to do nothing about it. They seem to harass the people who are on probation when they aren't doing anything wrong. When their family members break the law they don't' do anything about it!

Hearsay is one of the problems they believe in. Anybody could say anything about that person when they're on probation and they seem to pick them up right away, even

Dear Editor,

I'm so tired of being locked up, some days more than others. I am really looking forward to giving my best at responsible living upon release. There are positive things that I can't wait to do once I get out.

My priorities don't lie in partying anytime, all the time, like once upon a time. My new priorities involve taken away from my community, and now I want to give back. I believe that my generation overlooks our elders' needs, wants, and the knowledge that they could pass on to us. The generation that I grew up in, in my opinion, is too caught up in modernity, and all of today's technology—X box, internet, tweeting, and all of that kind of stuff. There's nothing wrong with that. I think we should focus on our roots, culture, and heritage-what we could learn continued on page 13

News from around Alaska

Compiled by Diana Haecker Man tortured and murdered in Bethel

Three men have been arrested in connection with a murder in Bethel. Police called the killing of 19-yearold Benjamin Kaiser of Hooper Bay prolonged and torturous. Police are still investigating the case. The Tundra Drums reports that Kaiser was beaten across his entire body. Police chief Larry Elarton says two men were arrested in Bethel on murder charges, Harry Ned Williams, 32 and Jeffrey Allan Hout, 46.

At least part of the beating took place in a shed behind Hout's house, where blood was found. Elarton says the beating seems to have centered around a property dispute. David Kenney, 37, was also arrested. Kenney was reportedly the owner of a pickup truck that the two suspects were torturing Benjamin Kaiser about. Kenney is said to have witnessed some of the torture and did not report it. He is charged with hindering prosecution. Williams and Hout are charged with first-degree homicide.

Man shot to death in Talkeetna

A 53-year old longshoreman was shot to death in a family restaurant and lodge in Talkeetna on Friday night. The shooter, 40-year-old Samuel Clark was arrested shortly after fleeing the scene. The victim, Dirk Fast, had a conversation with Clark at the time when Clark suddenly pulled his gun and shot Fast pointblank in the chest. Troopers are still investigating the case. This is the first shooting murder that occurred in Talkeetna.

Shell and North Slope Borough pair up for scientific research

AP- Shell Alaska and the North Slope Borough said last week that they entered into an agreement to collaborate on scientific research aimed at concerns about petroleum drilling on Alaska's Arctic Ocean outer continental shelf.

The agreement covers five years, with $2 million allocated by Shell for 2010 and 2011. Shell's plans for the short open water drilling season in 2010 were put on hold by the federal government after the Deepwater Horizon spill. Interior Secretary Ken Salazar imposed a suspension on drilling over concerns about what a blowout could do in Arctic waters, where foul weather is legendary and there is far less infrastructure along the coast that could aid in a cleanup effort.

The borough has been critical of drilling plans as it seeks to protect residents who depend on the ocean for a subsistence lifestyle that includes hunting whales, other marine mammals and birds. Shell Alaska vice president Pete Slaiby said the program, guided by a steering committee with community members, opens up the research process to incorporate traditional knowledge and concerns of residents. Projects could focus on anything from marine organisms to the flow of the ocean, he said.

AFN launches fifth round of Alaska Marketplace

The Alaska Federation of Natives rolled out the fifth Alaska Marketplace idea and business competition. This time AFN didn't make a big announcement of the competition that has in the past four rounds awarded small business start-ups in Alaska with $1.5 million.

AFN president Julie Kitka told The Nome Nugget that this year's competition is a little bit different as it not only awards money to small businesses but also to ideas that provide solutions to rural Alaska challenges. Ideas can be submitted in five different categories. Kitka said the competition fund is about $300,000 strong so far, to be distributed among 20 or so finalists. The sponsors of the competition are BP, Conoco Phillips, the Denali Commission and Mitsubishi International.

Dental therapists pass muster, finds evaluation

RTI International of Research Triangle Park, N.C., the Rasmuson Foundation and the Bethel Community Services Foundation conducted a twoyear study that found that dental health aide therapists in Alaska are providing safe dental services. The dental therapist program has been questioned since its inception in Alaska in 2005 by the American Dental Association.

ADA sued, but the dental health aide program prevailed because it is governed by federal Indian Health legislation. The evaluation assessed the work of dental therapists in five communities, as well as the experience of hundreds of patients and how dental therapists performed on hundreds of procedures. They were directly observed performing sealant placement, composite and amalgam preparations, stainless steel crown placement, and oral health instruction.

Key findings of the evaluation were that dental therapists are technically competent to perform the procedures within their scope of work, they are doing so safely and that they work under the general supervision of dentists. The findings also include that dental therapists are successfully treating cavities and helping to relieve pain for people who often had to wait months or travel hours to seek treatment, and that patients were very satisfied with the care they received, and that they are well-accepted in tribal villages.

Tribal leader launches website to connect villages

Mike Williams, 14-time Iditarod mushing veteran, sobriety advocate, Akiak resident and Alaska Native tribal leader acquired a social media networking website called AlaskanVillages.org. Williams said that on this website, every rural village has its own individual web page that enables the villagers to post messages, classified ads, obituaries, birth announcements and anything else that they would like to say to the community along with posting videos, pictures and music.

Spotted Seals protected in China, not in Alaska

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration found that two small populations of spotted seals in China and Russia are threatened under the Endangered Species Act due to the loss of sea ice. However, NOAA has denied protections for larger spotted seal populations, about 98 percent of the species, suffering from sea-ice loss in Alaskan waters. The decision formalizes protection for small populations in Liaodong Bay in China and Peter the Great Bay in Russia due to the threats from diminishing sea ice. Spotted seals use the edge of the sea ice away from predators as safe habitat for giving birth and rearing their pups in winter and spring; loss, thinning and early breakup of the ice threaten the seals' ability to raise young. NOAA had previously denied ESA protection for the ribbon seal. In May 2008, the Center for Biological Diversity filed a petition to protect ice-dependent spotted seals, bearded seals and ringed seals under the Endangered Species Act due to threats from global warming and increasing oil development. A finding on whether listing is warranted for the ringed and bearded seals is due by the end of the year. The center is currently challenging the agency's decision to deny Endangered Species Act protection to the ribbon seal.

Dr. Karen O'Neill reappointed to EMS council

Governor Sean Parnell reappointed Dr. Karen O'Neill to the Alaska Council on Emergency Medical Services. The council advises the commissioner of Health and Social Services and the governor on planning and implementation of the emergency medical services system. She has served as a medical provider in the Nome region since 1975, including service with Emergency Medicine Associates and Norton Sound Health Corporation, O'Neill is reappointed to a seat reserved for an Alaska Native health care organization administrator.

ing a total of 1,990 samples used for performing geochemistry surveys. The exploration program, which was budgeted for $800,000, aimed to find hard-rock gold deposits in upland areas around historic placer mining operations.

An Oct. 22 press release issued by Millrock labeled the surface work as encouraging. It noted that while two of the 17 drill holes encountered bedrock gold mineralization, the drilling as a whole failed to test what the company described as "anticipated structural and stratigraphic targets."

Millrock has three groups of claims in the Council area aimed at finding the source that fed placer operations along the Niukluk River and Ophir and Albion creeks. The claims cover approximately 350 square miles. Some of the claims are established through the state while others are subject to an agreement made with Bering Straits Native Corp., which owns lands within the claim area. Some of the surface lands in the area are owned by Council Native Corp.

Millrock was also busy this summer at Bluff, approximately 15 miles east of the Big Hurrah gold deposit near the Bering Sea coast. Millrock concentrated its efforts at what it calls the Daniel's Creek zone, drilling 24 holes at depths of approximately 130 meters. The company said in an Oct. 20 press release that the drilling confirmed gold mineralization in the deposit.

The approximately 90-squaremile Bluff prospect, which Millrock is exploring with partner Valdez Gold, covers land where the subsurNative Corp. Lee sentenced to 10 years in death of son

By Sandra L. Medearis

People have been saying bad things about his client, the public defender told the court. Small town rumors would extend Frank David Lee's sentence beyond the 10 years handed down last week. Bob Lewis said.

What Lee, of Teller, said about himself in court when he pleaded guilty to criminal negligent homicide was that he had killed his baby son by shaking him. What court records say about Lee is that he has a string of prior convictions.

Lee, 36, had a sentence hearing Oct. 29 after pleading guilty in July to a felony charge of criminally negligent homicide, reduced from two counts of murder in the death of 7month-old Harley Dickson from child abuse-"shaken baby syndrome" in October 2008. The guilty plea to the lesser felony cancelled Lee's trial on the two counts of murder that a grand jury handed up in July 2009.

Last fall, Tammy Dickson, Harley's mom, hanged herself in her father's house. A few months later, Harley's grandfather, Strom Dickson of Teller, died of a heart attack.

People are saying bad things about Lee, Lewis said.

"Mr. Lee has been recipient of the rumor mill and gossip mill with [information] that far exceeds the facts," Lewis said. "Comments of the community that go toward the chain of events involving misinformation and gossipy things are following this horrible event," Lewis said in a presentence statement.

Just the facts are bad enough.

Eva Dickson, Harley's aunt, told the court before sentencing that a day didn't go by that she did not think of her nephew, her sister Tammy and their father.

Eva Dickson sat in the first row of the jury box where she could use the microphone.

"It has impacted my whole family," Eva Dickson said. She spoke of her father's death. She spoke of Tammy Dickson being distraught over not having custody of one child and distraught over the loss of her son Harley, believing that Harley needed her.

"She took her own life to be with one of her children," Eva Dickson said. "When he murdered Harley, he took three people."

Before the sentencing, Eva Dickson said the family would finally have closure, too long in coming. "I have waited too long for this day," she said.

Lee had written a statement, he said, "but I forgot it in my room.

"I accept this punishment. This is going to follow me a long way," he said. "I apologize to everyone I've hurt.'

Judge Ben Esch said Lee had not shown remorse. Additionally, he had prior convictions and charges, some as a juvenile and several misdemeanor assaults as an adult. His record under a previous parole "had not been great," the judge said.

Esch said he believed the maximum sentence of 10 years suitable just by "your conduct in this case." The lesser charge of criminally negligent homicide was a compromise. Lee had made a handful of motions asking for charges to be dismissed.

Prosecutor Gregg Olson attended the sentencing by telephone.

This was a serious case, the death of a child, a young, vulnerable child unable to protect itself. Lee's crime left another child of Tammy Dickson without a biological mother and without a biological father, Olson said.

'These cases have victims beyond immediate victims," he said.

People incarcerated with Lee at Anvil Mountain Correctional Center also said bad things about Lee, according to court hearing documents. At a bail hearing, a former inmate witness reported that Lee spoke of getting drugs after his release and positioning himself on the side of the road to harm Alaska State Troopers, according to court documents. Prosecutors contended that Lee's release would pose a risk to the community.

As a result, the court rescinded his bail and reset bail at $15,000 at a Sept. 29 hearing.

Lee has now completed voluntary alcohol treatment, Lewis said.

Esch acknowledged that effort as a very positive example for others. Shaken Baby Syndrome is a form of child abuse where the abuser violently shakes a baby or small child creating a whiplash motion causing acceleration-deceleration injuries that can lead to death or severe brain injuries. Lee will be eligible for discretionary parole after he has served 40 months, Esch said Monday. After 80 months, he will be eligible for mandatory parole, if he follows rules.

Esch said he expected Lee, now incarcerated, to be transferred to a prison in Colorado. The indictment followed a nine-month investigation by law enforcement.

Dead bowhead found tangled in commercial pot gear

Submitted by Craig George, North Slope Borough Senior Wildlife Biologist

A dead bowhead whale found floating in the southern Chukchi Sea in July likely drowned while entangled in commercial pot gear.

The gear is the type commonly used in Bering Sea commercial fisheries for crab and cod. The whale was found by biologists from the National Marine Fisheries Service and local hunters working on a seal study. Over the years, several bowhead whales have been found entangled in lines consistent with pot fisheries, but this is the first whale in which the gear type could be positively identified.

The 45-foot female bowhead was first reported approximately 23 miles northeast of Shishmaref, near Cape Espenburg, on the northern Seward Peninsula. The whale was entangled in more than 115 feet of rope attached to a 20-pound metal corner section from a crab or cod pot. Rope associated with the pot was tightly secured to the whale's tail and head.

Three weeks after the initial sighting, a biologist from the Alaska Department of Fish and Game examined the whale where it washed ashore 30 miles south of Kotzebue on the western shore of the Baldwin Peninsula. The whale was in an advanced state of decomposition; how-recognized by markings on its left side. Based on the types of injuries and gear, it was clear that the whale had not been killed during the legal subsistence harvest.

"Compared to similar species in the North Atlantic, such as right whales, fishing gear entanglement in Alaskan bowheads is uncommon," said Dr. Michael Moore of the Woods Hole Oceanographic Institution. "However, for every dead entangled animal there will likely be a larger number of sublethally impacted animals. This case will be a harbinger of more cases, if fixed gear fisheries and bowhead whales increase their co-existence in time and place.

Worldwide, entanglement in fishing gear is a major source of mortality for whales. Biologists have estimated more than 100,000 small and large whale species die each year from entanglements in nets, pot and other fishing gear. A surprising number of bowhead whales harvested for subsistence in the western Arctic population show scars from past entanglement injuries and is a concern to the communities that rely on bowheads. Finding dead bowheads with ropes or fisheries gear attached to them is uncommon; however it is unknown how many bowheads (from the Bering-Chukchi-Beaufort sea stock) die in commercial fishing gear

Injury was noted to the skin and blubber. holder. Only a few of the houses are truly ripe for abatement, several council members said. Others are in need of repair. Other unclaimed jewels have been neatly boarded up and made safe from hazardous, drinking parties and skulduggerous play.

Papasodora drove around town and put together a slide show of waiting-to-be-prime real estate. He screened the slides at a noon Council work session Oct. 28. The Council is getting ready to ride herd-once again—on derelict buildings cluttering neighborhoods of otherwise well-kept abodes showing vigorous pride of ownership.

The Council several years ago assembled a packet of house listings with the edict that they be cleaned up in one year. Owners have squared away a few; others are still on the list

Nome city law has Chapter 5.30 to deal with hazardous and abandoned structures that provides for hearings, abatements and gives definitions of conditions that make a building unsafe. City officers can nominate structures as fire hazards, health hazards or public nuisances, after which the Council publicizes a hearing to determine if an order for abatement

If the City then declares a building a hazard or nuisance, the owner or his agent has 14 days to remove the building or the City will do it for him. That's what it says. But before the removal begins, the owner or agent can ask for another hearing to show that improvements have been made or are underway.

Should the City remove the building, the cost is chargeable to the building. The salvaged material may be sold at public auction and any remaining cost be held against the land.

Papasodora had a problem with the City's law: It has no teeth, no penalty, he said. The way the law is written, it is hard to enforce.

The Council had a minor problem with Papasodora's overhead presentation: No hard copy list of addresses that they might use for driving around to review the buildings themselves. Papasodora will make a list so the Council can check it twice.

At the end of the meeting, most people in the Council Chambers had the same question: "Why wasn't the Wien Building, Front Street's anchor eyesore for decades, on the list?"

The chief was fast on the draw. "That one is so obvious, I didn't need to list it," he said.

Lights, cameras and busses top school board agenda

Public Schools Superintendent Jon Wehde put the discussion over security cameras back on the table at the Oct. 26 Nome Board of Education work session.

Wehde previously broached the subject with the board at a meeting this summer, saying the cameras would be particularly beneficial for outside security at both the elementary and high schools. He reiterated that view at the Oct. 26 meeting, adding that indoor cameras are "a viable question for the board."

For the outside areas, Wehde said the playground at the elementary school and the pick-up and drop-off areas at both schools would be obvious targets for security cameras. A discussion on how and where

Brighter lights, lower bills

The school board work session included a short tour through the elementary school to get a peek at new LED lights installed in a classroom. The energy-sipping lights give off a crisp, bright white light when compared to the fluorescent lights commonly found in schools.

Bill Potter from the district's maintenance department led the tour, telling board members that the new lights have been placed in the Nome-Beltz maintenance shop and slashed its energy consumption by 200 kwh. He said the lights have been sourced from Bering Straits Native Corp.

service back to the door of the Anvil City Science Academy charter school. Students who attend the school are dropped off with those attend Nome-Beltz Junior/Senior High. The charter school is located on the same campus as the main school, but is housed in the same building as the district office. The charter school students are required to cross the drive between the two buildings in the dark morning hours.

Wehde also said the district plans to put a lighted crosswalk sign near the crossing to alert motorists.

Wehde said having the busses make an extra stop for the charter school would cost the district more for the service.

The second bussing issue of the night was the continued discussion of whether a later bus should be scheduled in the afternoon at Nome-Beltz to accommodate students in after-school clubs or activities that cannot otherwise find a ride back into Nome. Wehde stressed the need to find out how many students would take advantage of the service, a difficult task without implementing the bus. "It costs money to know [ridership]," he said.

He admitted that there are likely students who would participate in more activities if the later bus were available. "I think there are kids falling through the cracks," he said.

The issue was again batted around the table Oct. 26 with a pledge for further examination inside cameras may be used was saved for a later meeting.

Wehde said cameras, if installed, would not be generally monitored but would record footage that could be reviewed if needed. The superintendent said there could be a need for monitoring one area for the Northwestern Alaska Career and Technical Center at the Nome-Beltz campus, but deferred from giving more detail until NACTEC Director Doug Walrath could join him at a school board meeting.

Wehde said the cameras could be paid for through a federal grant that the City of Nome could obtain.

The presentation was the second installment in what Wehde said is a four-part emergency preparedness update he is delivering to the board. He said he would be presenting more information on security cameras as he studies the issue for the district.

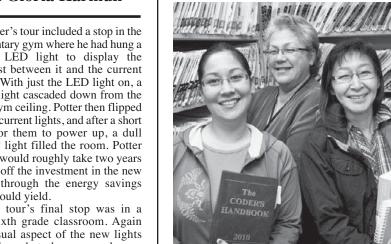

At this early stage, the idea received support from School Board

Potter's tour included a stop in the elementary gym where he had hung a single LED light to display the contrast between it and the current bulbs. With just the LED light on, a white light cascaded down from the high gym ceiling. Potter then flipped on the current lights, and after a short wait for them to power up, a dull yellow light filled the room. Potter said it would roughly take two years to pay off the investment in the new lights through the energy savings they would yield.

The tour's final stop was in a fifth/sixth grade classroom. Again the visual aspect of the new lights was clear, but there was also an audio facet to the LED lights. Absent in the LED-lighted room was the hum that comes with traditional fluorescent lights.

Bussing concerns

Wehde told the board that the district is considering bringing bus

Teachers look to adapt Kennewick model to Nome

Korenek-Johnson said.

By Tyler Rhodes

A group of teachers who traveled to Washington state Oct. 4-6 to get a firsthand look at a school success story gave a near-breathless report to the Nome Board of Education Oct. 26 on what they saw and learned.

While board members lauded the group for their energetic response to the trip, they also questioned what will ultimately result from the expensive endeavor. "I appreciate your enthusiasm. I want to know how Nome Public Schools will benefit," said board president Gloria Karmun. "We've made this investment. They've gone to the Kennewick schools. Is there going to be an implementation timeline?"

Their answer to the board: We would like to do something similar, but it's not our job alone.

everybody thing."

The collaboration among the Kennewick staff went beyond teachers working with teachers. The Nome educators said a wide variety of staff delivered reading instruction at the schools, whether it was aides, the librarian, music teacher or the gym teacher. "It's a nice way to structure without having more people come in, utilizing what we have in a different way," Lammer said.

The teachers did acknowledge that by committing so much energy to the reading program, there were areas in the Kennewick schools that were put on a back burner. "It was so focused that other things that were equally as important may be negatively effected. Social studies time was not there for some students. Some students didn't get as much science time," Marvin said.

The rationale for the lopsided

"It wasn't just a building issue, it was district-wide piece. It was the community, it was school board, it was building principals, it wasn't just directed at teachers. It's an along, with teachers Krista Marvin, Korenek-Johnson, Lammer, Kris Busk and Meghan Ten Eyck, spoke at length about the instituted practices in the Kennewick, Wash., elementary schools that ultimately resulted in 90 percent of its third graders scoring proficient in reading. They told how the schools in the community made reading education the top priority through a concerted effort that involved the school board, administrators, teachers, support staff and even outside entities along with the community as a whole. "It wasn't just a building issue, it was district-wide piece, Lammer said. "It was the community, it was the school board, it was the building principals; it wasn't just directed at teachers.'

The group presenting to the board said they would like to take some ideas from the Kennewick schools to apply at Nome elementary, but noted that it will require a broad plan and a cohesive effort from all corners of the school district to make it happen. "It's an everybody thing," Lammer said.

Using a top-10 list as the backbone of their presentation the Nome teachers delved into what made the Kennewick system tick. The message boiled down to the fact that the Washington district had an unyielding, near singular focus on the goal of improving reading scores. The Nome contingent said reading instruction time at the schools was sacred, as were weekly meetings for teachers to collaborate. "Structuring the day to give kids the time needed was very important to making the proficiency goal," Busk said.

focus on reading was that if students could not read well, they had little hope of succeeding in other subjects. "If students could read proficiently, then students would perform better throughout their years in school,' Busk said, summing up the Washington district's philosophy.

While the Kennewick district is similar to Nome in terms of serving a number of economically disadvantaged students and one cultural group that lags behind others in terms of achievement scores, it differs in its size. While Nome has a single elementary school and a combined junior-senior high school, Kennewick has 14 elementary schools, four middle schools and three high schools. While the difference in scale does not prohibit Nome's teachers from gleaning ideas from the larger district, it does present a challenge in implementing some of those ideas.

The Nome teachers said they did not want to simply try and replicate what was being done in Kennewick but did see the possibility of adapting some of the district's ideas. "We're not Kennewick and there are many different things from Kennewick, Busk said. "But we found out we can align ourselves with some of the things they are doing."

The Nome teachers identified a renewed effort to adhere to the school's reading program as the most immediate way to start improving the district's reading scores. They cited a need for increased training in the use and implementation of the reading curriculum. "We've only had one training on it or none for new teachers in the building. If you don't have training or follow-up training, then you have fidelity issues,

As a long-term goal, they said the district should shoot for joining Kennewick in having 90 percent of Nome's third graders reading at the proficient level in three years. To get there, the teachers acknowledged there would need to be some structural changes in the school. School board President Karmun asked the teachers to continue to spread the message throughout the district. "Now's the time to educate," she said

Nanook swimmers show up to swim at regionals

Submitted by Kirsten Bev

The Nome-Beltz High School swimmers traveled to Fairbanks for their regional swim meet this past weekend. Six schools participated in this regional - West Valley, Lathrop, North Pole, Monroe Catholic, Hutchison and Nome-Beltz.

Six of the seven Nanook swimmers qualified for finals in their events; most qualifying in the consolation finals (positions 7 to 12), so their swims did not count in team scores.

Nathan Blandford qualified in the top six in the 50 freestyle event and the 100 freestyle event. Nathan finished sixth in the 50 free and fifth in the 100 free. Nathan obtained personal best times in both these events in his preliminary races, swimming under 25 seconds in the 50 free and under 56 seconds in the 100 free. Devyyn Johnson qualified in the top six in the 100 Breaststroke, finishing fifth place in the finals. She also swam a personal best in the preliminary match of just over 1 minute and 21 seconds.

The boys' relay teams placed fourth in both of their events: the 200 medley relay and the 200 freestyle relay. The boys' team finished with 15 points and the girls' team finished with two points.

Miranda Murphy earned a personal best in the 50 freestyle event, finishing in 11th place. Jake

"The Nanook swimmers had a very successful season."

- Kirsten Bey

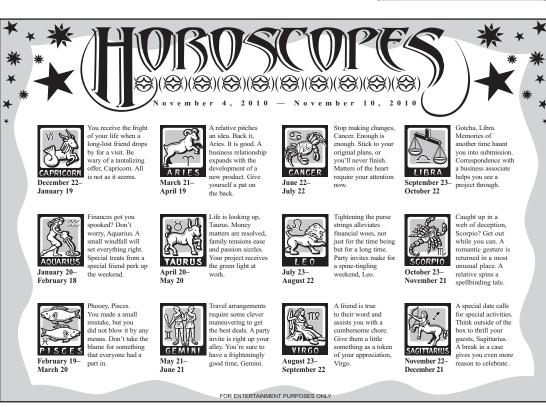

Stettenbenz earned a personal best in the 50 freestyle event, finishing 12th. He also qualified for the finals in the 200 Individual Medley event, finishing 8th.

Morgan Nick significantly decreased his time in the 100 Backstroke over his time at the Palmer meet two weeks ago and finished in 12th place. Zach Sullivan also earned personal bests, significantly decreasing his times in the 100 backstroke and 100 breaststroke, finishing both of these events in 10th place.

Kaylene Evans participate in the meet but after swimming the 50 freestyle decided she was too sick to compete in any meaningful way, so she cheered the team from the bleachers.

The Nanook swimmers had a very successful season. Four new swimmers joined the team this year and as none are seniors, all are available to return next year.

Cold sores or herpes simplex virus can be a nuisance

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

The common "cold sore" is known for causing unsightly painful sores on the lip. Most often cold sores are merely a painful nuisance. But in the susceptible individual the virus that causes a cold sore can lead to life threatening problems.

days of a painful blister-like lesion that eventually crusts over. The worst discomfort occurs during the blistering stage, which normally lasts for 3-5 days.

A person with an active infection is contagious from the first sensations of tingling until the lesions crust over.

Cold sores, known formally as herpes labialis, are viral infections of the outer lip caused by the Herpes Simplex virus. The herpes virus that causes oral sores is only a distant cousin of the virus by the same name that causes genital infections.

The virus is most often caught early in life from sharing eating utensils, sharing cups or water bottles, or kissing a person with an active sore. The virus begins to cause a sore between one and three weeks after ex-

The symptoms start as a tingling or burning sensation in the affected portion of the lip followed by several

The Herpes virus that causes cold sores is unique because it never really goes away. After an outbreak, the virus lies dormant in one of the nerves of the lip waiting for an opportune time to flare. Most often this occurs during times of increased stress or during an unrelated viral in-called a "fever blister." The herpes simplex virus can be dangerous for susceptible individuals including infants, elders, or those with underlying health conditions that suppress the immune system. In fection, like a cold, thus the name

"cold sore," or during an illness that causes fever. So it is sometimes these individuals the virus may cause serious brain infections, called encephalitis, or eye infections leading to blindness. In people with severe eczema, the herpes virus can cause more severe skin infections.

The most important way people can prevent the spread of infection is to wash their hands frequently, avoid oral contact with others, and avoid sharing eating utensils until the sore completely resolves.

Treatment for occasional mild outbreaks is symptomatic. Topical over-the-counter numbing medicines like lidocaine and benzocaine may be used for temporary relief. Acetaminophen (Tylenol) or Ibuprofen (Advil or Motrin) may also be used for pain relief.

Often people find applying a cold compress or ice to the affected area offers temporary relief.

It is important to avoid picking, squeezing, or scratching active lesions because this can cause spread to other parts of the body or lead to a secondary bacterial infection.

Doctors treat more serious outbreaks of herpes labialis with one of three anti-viral medications: acyclovir (Zovirax), valaciclovir (Valtrex), or famcyclovir (Famvir). If started at the first sign of an outbreak, these medicines can shorten the duration of blisters and reduce the pain associated with active sores.

These medications are also helpful for reducing the frequency of outbreaks in people who have recurring

You should consult your healthcare provider about an active cold sore if:

- Your symptoms are severe.
- You have an underlying health condition that has compromised your immune system.

- Your sores do not heal within 7-14 days.
 - Your sores recur frequently. · You have any eye irritation associated with an outbreak.

Cold sores can be annoying, but with a little prevention and early treatment, most people find outbreaks are manageable and do not interfere with daily life.

with a deliberate 25-6 win. Nome was able to keep it closer in the next two games, but still lost 25-18 and 25-15.

The teams' junior varsity squads also played over the weekend. Dillingham took both the Friday and Saturday matches. Friday's match was a close affair with Dillingham winning 3-2. Dillingham took the first two games 25-21 and 28-26. Nome took the next two 23-25 and 16-25 only to lose the fifth and final match 15-7. Dillingham won Saturday's match 3-1. The Lady Nanooks JV squad took the first game 17-25 before Dillingham took the next three close contests 25-19, 25-23 and 25-21.

The Nome varsity team heads to Dillingham this weekend to compete in the Western Conference Girls Volleyball Tournament. Nome will first face Bethel at 6 p.m. Thursday. Other first-round games are Dillingham vs. Unalaska and Hooper Bay vs. Barrow. Kotzebue receives a first-round bye. The top two teams at the tournament will advance to state.

voters a list identifying approved write-in candidates. The list had the names, their party affiliation and the registration status with the division.

Election officials say they were trying to provide voter assistance and they asserted their authority to hand out a list of write-in candidates and their party under the division's statutory obligation to assist voters. The Alaska Supreme Court ruled that if a voter requests a write-in list and assistance in spelling a name, handing out a write-in list is permissible. "We conclude that when a voter requests assistance in casting a write-in vote and that request for assistance cannot be addressed by the posted general instructions for completing a writein ballot, the assistance provided to the voter must be related to and commensurate with the voter's request," the decision document reads.

The Supreme Court however agreed with the Democratic and Alaska Republican parties that party affiliation should be prohibited because it would not be necessary to address the voter's request for assistance.

The Supreme Court also dismissed its previous order that told the Division of Elections to mark and segregate ballots by early voters who used the write-in lists. "We are very disappointed with this decision. We continue to believe that election rules must be followed in order for the public to have confidence in the impartiality of the election process," said Patti Higgins, chair of the Alaska Democratic Party.

On Saturday, conservative radio show host Eddie Burke-who ran for lieutenant governor-Harold Rudolph Sr., April Pugh, Greg Pugh and Kevin Hite filed a federal lawsuit contesting the state Supreme Court's decision. The lawsuit alleges that in providing write-in lists, the state has changed its rules for holding elections and did so without receiving the required approval of the U.S. Department of Justice.

While the courts sort out the legalities of voting and what information voters should be allowed to have, Miller supporters began to flood the list of senatorial candidates by filing bogus write-in candidacies. A search on the database of the Division of Election shows that since last week, 198 new write-in names have been added to the senatorial race. Many were found ineligible; some had the same last names.

The spike in write-ins came after Anchorage KFQD radio show host Dan Fagan had encouraged Miller supporters to run as write-ins to cause what he called "operation Alaska chaos" to confuse the write-in list. Given Friday's Supreme Court ruling, all of these names are now going to be on a list that can be obtained by voters who request it at the polls.

Fenumiai, director of the Division of Elections, said all those found eligible have a right to be on the list if they successfully filed to run as write-ins.

How write-ins are counted

Fenumiai described in an interview with The Nome Nugget the process of counting write-in ballots. On election night, the ballots are counted and if the total number of write-ins is higher than ballots cast for any other candidate or if write-in ballots are very close to the race's winner, the division will launch a count of the write-in ballots by name. "In order for results on individual write-in candidates, write-in ballots would have to receive the most votes or can be second, but the difference between the top vote-getter and the write-in must be only one half of a percent," Fenumiai said.

If Murkowski does not come within this one half of a percent bracket, and if the result is not challenged in court, there won't be any chance to find out how many people cast their ballots for her.

If write-ins rise to the level of being counted by individual name, the counting won't start until Nov. 18. Fenumiai said that by then absentee ballots and questioned ballots have to be counted. A questioned ballot is when a voter cannot be identified at a polling place, or if the name is not on the precinct register. The questioned ballots are then sent to a regional office and are reviewed by a board, which tries to identify the person and his or her eligibility to vote.

And how would a recount request work? "After the election is certified, a losing candidate or 10 qualified voters can request a recount," Fenumiai said. The recount is free of cost to the person who requested it if the difference between winner and second place is 20 or fewer votes. If the difference is more than 20, the person who requests a recount has to shell out $15,000 for a statewide recount.

Did Lisa win?

Norton Sound votes appear to have given Murkowski overwhelming support

By Tyler Rhodes

While the results of the U.S. Senate race between Republicans Lisa Murkowski and Joe Miller were still officially undecided this week, an examination of Norton Sound region voters showed a decisive backing of write-in candidates for the job.

In each of the 15 villages making up the Norton Sound region, write-in votes led all others in the hotly contested three-way race. As a whole, 65.6 percent of the region's voters who went to the polls voted for a write-in candidate. It is largely assumed that the vast majority of those votes are for Murkowski, who ran an aggressive write-in campaign after losing the primary race to Miller.

It is still uncertain how many of the write-in votes statewide, which were leading the race at press time by nearly 13,500 votes, are actually for Murkowski. Further, it is unknown how many of those votes could be disqualified for misspellings or other problems.

Some of that uncertainty was to be lifted Wednesday as state election workers were scheduled to start opening write-in ballots and determining for whom they were cast. The Nugget went to press before results could be known of Tuesday's start of counting of nearly 30,500 absentee and early voting ballots, and Wednesday's start of write-in counting. It is expected to take two to three days to count the write-in ballots. The remainder of absentee ballots, which the state will receive up until Nov. 17, will be counted on Nov. 17.

For all the uncertainty surrounding the race, it was clear that Norton Sound voters were more inclined to put Murkowski or Democrat Scott

Council members call for cameras, officer for Front Street

By Laurie McNicholas

The ongoing search for missing person Jeconiah Annogiyuk, 20, of Savoonga, who was last seen Oct. 29 on Front Street in Nome prompted comments and suggestions from members of the Nome Common Council at their meeting on Monday.

Councilman Jim West, Jr. praised entities such as Kawerak and Bering Straits Native Corp. for volunteering their employees for foot searches to cover Nome and outlying areas. He said search and rescue crews would find it hard to conduct the search for Annogiyuk without their support.

West suggested that the city look into a camera system for Front Street so the area can be watched from the new Public Safety Building on the Nome Bypass Road. He said the technology is used all over the world, and he requested that the idea be pursued. Councilman Stan Andersen said he likes West's idea if funding can be obtained for a camera system.

Councilwoman Mary Knodel said placing cameras on Front Street is a good idea, but she would like to see a community service officer back on Front Street. The police are not present on Front Street unless they are called, she added.

Contracts awarded

The council approved a resolution awarding a contract for the electrical upgrades project at the Nome Recreation Center to Bering Straits Development Co. The company submitted the lowest total base bid of $208,167 for the project. West voted against approval of the contract.

Still no clues on vanished man

Dogs, divers and renewed searches yield no finds

By Tyler Rhodes

A multi-pronged, extensive search effort in Nome for a missing 20-yearold Savoonga man still failed to yield any results as of Tuesday afternoon.

Since the initial efforts to locate Jeconiah Annogiyuk on Oct. 31 and Nov. 1, the search has involved a renewed effort on foot to cover all of Nome, the use of searchdog teams to scour the seawall and other areas,

He was last seen when he was kicked out of a Front Street restaurant because he was drunk. Public inebriates are nothing new for Nome. We see more than we should. The services these folks provide are Nomeites care about the safety of our neighbors and visitors. However, the burden of one's own safety lies within one's own self. Visitors need to know that they can't crawl off with a bottle that may have been provided by a "friend" and pass out in the middle of Front Street without endangering their life. Visitors need to know that when they stumble off to an abandoned shed and pass out, they may never be found. One needs to know that drunks cannot seek refuge in the rocks along the seawall or solace on the beach. Ice and snow will cover their bodies and they may never surface till spring. In our community we are very fortunate that the people who serve on our IRA, city and corporation boards basically grew up with each other and respect each other, or at least respect each other's opinions and are willing to listen to each other.

We are even more fortunate to have Middy and Aurora Johnson on our side. Middy is on all the boards, along with the NSEDC board, and is willing to take the time to stop what he is doing and listen to you, or try to find solutions to whatever problems you might have. Quyanak Buk Middy and Aurora. We are very proud of you and glad to have you here for us all.

So, people are always saying how disappointed they are that it seems like the city, IRA, and corporations seem to disagree a lot of the time. We elected those people onto those boards because we believe they are willing to do that for the betterment of our villages. In order to do that, the people elected are supposed to agree to work together for the community's sake so that we may have a stronger community that holds strong values to pass on to our future generations. Hopefully, along the way teach our future leaders (and the community in general) better coping

Compiled by Diana Haecker Parnell asks commissioners to resign

After winning his first gubernatorial election, Governor Sean Parnell requested resignation letters from all state commissioners, deputy commissioners and directors. Parnell served out ex-governor Sarah Palin's term after she quit the job in 2008.

Parnell said that he will ask some commissioners to continue to serve, but is looking for new leadership to staff some other agencies. Parnell plans to form seven transition groups to make recommendations to improve state agency performances. The advisory groups will focus on natural resources; health and education; infrastructure; science, technology and communications; financial services and business investment; public safety and justice; and the military.

"As we move into the next four years, I want to hear from Alaskans," Parnell said. Bryan Butcher was named transition coordinator. Butcher is the director of government relations and public affairs at the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation.

Republicans gain seats in state legislature

After the elections, legislative bodies from Juneau to Washington are reorganizing their chambers as Republicans gained seats across the nation. In Alaska, 10 Senate seats were up for election and the split between Democrats and Republicans remained 10 to 10. However, leadership positions shifted.

In the Senate, Republican Sen. Kevin Meyer, R-Anchorage, replaces Democrat Sen. Johnny Ellis, D-Anchorage, as the Alaska Senate bipartisan majority leader. Republican Sen. Gary Stevens of Kodiak remains Senate president.

In the House, Republicans increased their prior majority by two seats to 24 seats, and that leaves 16 Democrats in the House. Rep. Woodie Salmon, Democrat of Chalkvitsik, lost to Republican Alan Dick in a large district encompassing the Lower Yukon, Kuskokwim all the way to the Canadian border in the Wrangell area.

In Anchorage, Democrat Bob Buch lost to Republican Mia Costello. The seat vacated by Democrat Harry Crawford, who unsuccessfully ran for the U.S. House of Representatives, went to Republican Lance Pruitt. The only Democrat to defeat a Republican House representative was Bob Miller in Fairbanks, edging out Republican and sixyear incumbent Mike Kellv.

Just after the elections, the Alaska State House Majority caucus announced its leadership team. Rep. Mike Chenault, R-Nikiski, remains the speaker of the House. Majority leader is Rep. Alan Austerman, R-Kodiak. Rep. Peggy Wilson, R-Wrangell, is the new majority whip. Finance co-chairs are Republicans Bill Stolze, R-Chugiak, and Bill Thomas, R-Haines.

The lone Democrat and bush legislator to chair a committee is Reggie Joule, D-Kotzebue, who chairs the Bush Caucus. Joule said that speaker Chenault and the rest of leadership have worked with rural Alaska well in the past, and allowing for a greater dialogue about the diversity in the state.

Minority Democrats in the Alaska state House have announced their leaders for the upcoming 2011 legislative session. Rep. Beth Kerttula of Juneau retains her position as House minority leader. Rep. Berta Gardner of Anchorage is minority whip, and Rep. Max Gruenberg of Anchorage is minority floor leader. Reggie Joule is a member of the finance commit-

State in charge to permit pollution discharge

The state of Alaska is one step closer to be in charge of issuing permits that allow water discharges from mines, sewer systems, industrial and municipal wastewater. The federal Environmental Protection Agency is relinquishing its authority to the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation.

Environmental groups challenged the transfer of regulating wastewater discharge permitting in Alaska from the EPA to the DEC. In a Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals hearing last week, the judge upheld the transfer. The court decision affirmed that the state had met all of the criteria required by federal law to assume responsibility for the program and dismissed the plaintiffs' appeal. DEC is phasing in its authority under the National Pollutant Discharge Elimination System program, including the permitting of regulated discharges from mines. Nationwide, 46 states manage their own wastewater programs under the Clean

Polar bears: Court orders clarification if bears are threatened or endangered

A federal judge ordered last week that the Fish and Wildlife Service needs to come up with additional explanations why they classified polar bears as "threatened" rather than "endangered" under the Endangered Species Act. U.S District judge Emmett Sullivan in Washington D.C. wrote in his ruling that the definition of an "endangered species" is ambiguous and that the FWS needs to submit supporting arguments by Dec. 23 to defend their finding. The ruling comes after three conservation groups sued the government, arguing that the polar bear should be listed as endangered.

In 2008, a petition was granted to list the species under the Endangered Species Act, but the Bush administration then also issued a special rule exempting greenhouse gases from regulation under the ESA. Such a rule can only be issued for a species listed as threatened, not endangered. The conservation groups argue that the demise of the polar bears is a result of global warming and greenhouse gases that melt the polar caps. The Department of the Interior had argued that even though the polar bear will likely be extinct in most of its range by midcentury, it was not endangered because its extinction was not "imminent."

In his ruling issued last week, judge Sullivan rejected the department's argument that the text of the Endangered Species Act clearly states that extinction must be "imminent" before a species can be listed as endangered and ordered the Interior Department to reconsider its definition of "endangered" as it applies to the polar bear.

EPA rejects ban on lead fishing gear, ammunition

The Environmental Protection Agency denied a petition to ban lead fishing sinkers. Conservationists, hunters and veterinarian groups maintain that lead is toxic and that fishing sinkers frequently kill loons, swans and cranes. The EPA had issued a ruling in September that denied the request for a ban of lead ammunition.

Search

clue as to the whereabouts or what happened to the young man who was last seen Oct. 29.

Although searchers have come up empty-handed so far, Nome Police Sergeant Byron Redburn said the work has not been in vain. "All of this is helpful. They're eliminating places [where Annogiyuk may be], he said. "That's why we've got a person in the water."

According to police, Annogiyuk was last seen on Friday, Oct. 29 after he was kicked out of Nome's Subway restaurant. He was reportedly intoxicated at the time and seen stumbling down the street. Redburn said Annogiyuk had arrived in Nome that day with his biological mother to go shopping for clothing. He was first reported missing Oct. 31.

Annogiyuk went missing just as Nome received its first substantial snow of the year. Anywhere from four inches to a foot or more of snow covers the ground in and around Nome, a sufficient amount to hide someone who may be lying down. Temperatures have remained below freezing since Annogiyuk's disappearance, dipping as low as the single digits a couple of times. Annogiyuk was reported to have been wearing a brown "hoodie" sweatshirt under a light black jacket, blue jeans and white tennis shoes. He was not wearing a hat or gloves. "If he's been outside, we believe he's succumbed to the elements," Redburn told a group of searchers Nov. 5.

Searches for Annogiyuk have been almost solely focused on locating a person, not his possessions. Apart from the clothes he was wearing, Annogiyuk is believed to only have been carrying his cell phone, a black Samsung. Annogiyuk's backpack and affairs were left where he was staying and have subsequently been taken back to Savoonga by family members.

An initial search for the young man involved teams on foot examining the seawall and town, looking in unused cars, under buildings and other places a person could seek refuge. A helicopter was used Nov. 1 to get an aerial view of the seawall and other areas. Searchers also worked their way through the west beach area.

A renewed ground effort was organized and launched by Kawerak Inc. Nov. 5. The effort gathered approximately 40 to 50 searchers who sprawled out to go through each lot in town, again looking under buildings, in abandoned vehicles and in outbuildings. A large number of Kawerak employees were joined by other Nome residents and a few members of Annogiyuk's family for the search.

The volunteer searchers blanketed Nome, peering under buildings with flashlights and opening the doors of abandoned cars. To the surprise of some searchers, a couple of abandoned cars were indeed harboring living occupants who were not the object of the effort.

A second Kawerak-organized search took place Monday, covering Belmont Point, Willow Ridge (a.k.a. Martinson-ville) and Icy View. Monday's search drew only a fraction of the volunteers that Friday's effort attracted. Kawerak President Loretta Bullard said Kawerak employees were able to help in the search while still on the clock.

While initial searches had examined the seawall, the snow cover and difficulty of walking along the rock wall that separates downtown Nome from the sea made searching the area a challenge. To better examine the seawall, a pair of search dogs and their handlers were brought to Nome from Anchorage. Sergeant Redburn said Corey Aist and Deb Gillis, along with their canine companions, gave the area a thorough covering. "They worked it a couple of times. They feel fairly confident that there's nothing there," Redburn said. "They worked other areas as well and the result is the same."

Aist and Gillis volunteered their own time to perform the search. The Alaska State Troopers arranged the flight to Nome for the dog teams. The Troopers also arranged the Nov. 1 helicopter search using Bering Air aircraft.

After the exhaustive work performed on land in the immediate vicinity of Nome, the Nome Police Department and Search and Rescue team turned their attention to the water Sunday and Monday. "We were thinking maybe the seawall [was where he would be located]," he said "Now that area has been eliminated, you have to look to the next place." That next place has been the small boat harbor where volunteer diver Rolland Trowbridge has braved the 28°F water to search for signs of Annogiyuk. The two days of diving yielded no results. Like the dog handlers, Trowbridge has volunteered his time and expertise to help.

Police are warning residents to stay clear of the area, noting that holes have been cut in the ice to give Trowbridge access to the water. Even if frozen over, the holes could have thinner ice than the rest of the area. creating a hazard.

In addition to the challenge of searching for Annogiyuk, police have had to also work to dispel rumors. Redburn said there have been several false reports of Annogiyuk or the body of another individual being found. "Lots of people were telling others that the police had found somebody," he said Monday. "He has not been found, nor had anybody else been found.'

Redburn said the search for Annogiyuk will continue, noting that he planned to ask aviators flying in and out of Nome to keep an eye out from above, especially along the area's roads. "We're always looking," he said.

ON THE SEARCH—Volunteer searchers from the community fan out Nov, 5 after gathering on River Street to conduct a search throughout Nome for missing 20-year-old Jeconiah Annogiyuk (pictured below).

A sad sense of déjà vu

At the start of the Nov. 5 search organized by Kawerak, Annogiyuk's brother-in-law, John Waghiyi Jr., thanked searchers for the efforts expended so far and asked that the search continue until Annogiyuk was found. "People are praying back home [in Savoonga]," he said. "We're hoping it's not going to end up in a negative way like it has for our people in the past.'

Annogiyuk is not the first man visiting Nome from St. Lawrence Island to disappear. The number of visiting village residents from throughout the region who either vanished or died under seemingly suspicious circumstances over the years prompted an FBI investigation in 2005. Despite the FBI's finding that the common thread in all the cases appeared most likely to be a mix of alcohol and the bitter winter weather, suspicions remain that other forces could be at work. "We lost quite a few people that never returned home. We never find them," said Ronnie Toolie, President of the Native Village of Savoonga.

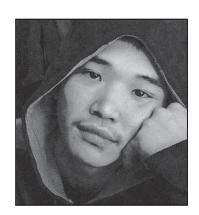

Speaking to the searchers gathered in Kawerak's board room Nov. 5, Waghiyi alluded to the potential that someone took advantage of his young brother-in-law. "When you let your guard down in town, detrimental and negative things will happen," he said. "People get preyed on."

A letter sent Nov. 4 to Nome Mayor Denise Michels signed by Toolie representing the Native Village of Savoonga touches on another aspect that echoes the past missing persons cases—a mistrust of law enforcement. The letter asks that that Redburn be taken off the case, "as the community of Savoonga and the family feel that Officer Redburn is insensitive to the family and that compassion is needed." The letter goes on to ask that the search continue until Annogiyuk is located and thanks the community of Nome for its work so far.

Redburn said he had seen the letter and shared it with Police Chief John Papasodora. He said he was unaware of any specific problem. He said all conversations regarding the investigation have been recorded. "We just do what we have to do. I'm going to do what I have to do," Redburn said, noting he and the department have put considerable energy into the search.

Both in a phone conversation and in the letter Toolie said a search team from Savoonga is ready to come to Nome if asked to take part in the search. "We're trying to pinpoint where he's at so we can at least retrieve one of own and bring him home," Toolie said Monday.

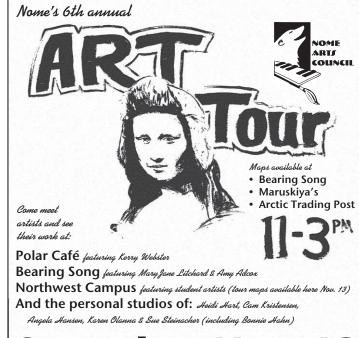

Keep an eye out

Nome residents are still asked to keep an eye out for any sign of Jeconiah Annogiyuk.

He is described as an Alaska Native male who is approximately 5'6" to 5'10" tall and weighs 140 to 150 lbs. He has a slight mustache and was wearing a brown hoodie sweatshirt, a black jacket, blue jeans and white shoes

Police ask those who do find any sign or information are asked to call police at (907) 443-5262. People are asked to not disturb any evidence they may encounter.

Mayor Denise Michels noted that Councilman Jerald Brown filed a conflict of interest statement in regard to the contract. Bering Straits Development Co. is a subsidiary of Brown's employer, Bering Straits Native Corp.

Andersen expressed concern that the winning bid was $142,000 less than the engineer's estimate of $350,530 for the project. He asked whether the city is still planning to start the project in May of 2011.

"Yes," replied City Manager Josie Bahnke. "The bid documents lay that out."

Andersen asked who will handle construction administration. Bahnke said the City is planning to hire RSA Engineering to administer construction for about $20,000. Andersen asked Bahnke to provide updates on the project at council meetings.

The council approved a resolution awarding a contract to Bonanza Fuel, Inc. to provide No. 1 heating fuel, equipment fuel, unleaded gasoline and vehicle diesel fuel delivery to the City of Nome and Nome Public Schools. West voted against approval of the contract. Bonanza Fuel responded to the city's advertisement for bids with the following prices: Heating Oil, $4.31 a gallon; Ultra Low Sulfur Diesel (USLD) equipment fuel, $4.56 a gallon; unleaded gasoline, $4.44 a gallon; and vehicle fuel diesel, $4.39 a gallon.

Crowley Marine submitted a letter to the city declining to submit a fixed price bid, but said the company is willing to provide a bid based on a discount from a terminal posted price. Crowley Marine also indicated it does not have ULSD available in Nome.

In regard to Crowley's letter, Brown said Bonanza Fuel had made a similar offer in the past. He said to bid a fixed price for fuel, the bidder has to set the price higher just in case the cost of fuel rises during the contract period. He suggested that in future requests for fuel bids, the city offer an option for a discount bid based on the terminal posted price of fuel.

Amendments to ordinances

The council heard first reading of an ordinance to amend sections of the Nome Code of Ordinances and moved it forward for a second reading and a public hearing at a future meeting. The proposed ordinance would amend Sections 3.10.020(b)(5) to replace outdated references to the Alaska administrative code with current references to the code of federal regulation requirements for medical certifications.

The proposed ordinance also would amend sections 3.10.095 and 3.10.105(a) to require applicants for taxicab licenses to provide certification of compliance with Chapter 17.10 pertaining to the collection and remittance of sales tax and to allow taxi permits to be denied or revoked for failure to file sales tax returns.

Facility fees waived

The council retroactively approved a facility fee waiver of $50 for the use of Old St. Joe's Hall from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. Nov. 3 for Public Health Nursing (PHN), Norton Sound Health Corp. PHN hosted a free public presentation entitled "Positive Solutions for Children with Challenging Behaviors." The speaker was McKenzie Weimer, a positive behavior solutions trainer and project coordinator for the Autism Family Support Center with the Stone Soup Group, a nonprofit Anchorage-based organization that supports families of children and youth with special needs.

The council also waived a fee of $800 for the Nome-Beltz High School boys and girls basketball teams for use of the Nome Recreation Center on Dec. 10 from 3 p.m. to 11 p.m. The teams will host an appearance by the Harlem Ambassadors, who will present a family-oriented show that includes a drug and alcohol-free message.

Communications

In a letter dated Nov. 3 to Bahnke, veterinarian Dr. Derrick Leedy noted that he has been back in business for about a month. He requested that the City of Nome discontinue its service agreement with Dr. Christina Kilby and allow him to conduct the vaccination clinic scheduled Dec. 8-11. He said Dr. Kilby received special permission to volunteer her services from her employer, Norton Sound Health Corp., because alternative services were not available at that time in Nome.

"I first established an oral agreement to hold annual Vaccination and Deworming clinics in cooperation with the City of Nome, with City Manager Perkins in 1977," Leedy wrote.

Bahnke said the city had needed to order vaccines and get them to Nome, so the clinic is set to go with Kilby. Andersen asked whether the city would keep working with Kilby in the future. "We can look at that," Bahnke replied. "It's a one-year contract."

The city received the following information in a letter dated Oct. 26 from Amanda Carr, an accountant with the Alaska Division of Motor Vehicles. "AS 28.10.431(j) states that any municipality that imposes a motor vehicle registration tax may change the amount of tax by passage of an appropriate ordinance no more than once every two years," Carr wrote. "Municipalities that wish to change the amount of MVRT collected for their area must notify DMVL in writing by Jan. 1, 2011 for changes that will take effect on Jan. 1, 2012."

Andersen said he had not realized the city could raise its MVRT rate. He asked Bahnke to find out how much the MVRT yields and how long it has been since the city raised its rate.

City manager's report

Bahnke said eight proposals for engineering services received by the Nov. 4 due date have been reviewed, and three of the bidders will be interviewed in Anchorage on Thursday of this week. Bahnke reported that Tom Schemm

Bahnke reported that Tom Schemm of Schemm Bowling Inc. will travel to Nome to restore the bowling alley at the Recreation Center for operation at a total cost of $54,540 excluding shipping charges. Schemm quoted labor, travel and lodging costs at $19,740; pinsetter parts at $19,600; and equipment costs at $15,200. The equipment includes ball racks and hoods, masking units, power lift control boxes, power lift repair parts, pins, rental shoes, house balls, lino duster and lino cloth.

Electorate issues

Brown was re-elected to his council seat Oct. 5 and took the oath of office at the beginning of the council meeting on Monday. He said that during the election process some people told him they would like to obtain agenda information for council meetings days in advance of the meeting dates. He asked whether meeting agendas could be printed in the newspaper. Andersen suggested placing them on the television scanner.

Bahnke said packets for council meetings are printed and available to council members and the public on the Friday before a regular council meeting on Monday. Michels said she thought council packets were posted on the City of Nome website.

"Not unless it's requested," Deputy Clerk Camille Ten Eyck said. "A new website is coming."

"The initial request was to put the packets online," Michels noted.

Upcoming event

Brown invited the public to attend a wind energy application training symposium on Thursday of this week and the annual Alaska Wind Working Group meeting on Friday at the Mini Convention Center. Both events are free of charge.

The symposium will teach participants how to apply for, install and integrate wind systems into their communities. It will run from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Thursday, followed by an optional workshop from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. on hybrid system modeling and feasibility studies.

The wind working group meeting on Friday from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. will include discussion of wind generation in Alaska, project updates and the latest on turbine options for Alaska. To register or obtain agendas listing speakers and their topics for both days, go to the Renewable Energy Alaska Project website, click on Programs and Events, then click on Alaska Wind Working Group.

Public comments

Kevin Kastner, executive director of the Iron Dog Race, thanked the council for supporting the race. Next year there will be a halfway prize awarded in Nome of $10,000 in gold, he announced. He said he hopes the race receives the same support from the city as in the past.

Nome resident Diana Adams

asked the city to look into, designate and plat the right of ways on FAS (Federal-aid secondary highway system) roads around town that the federal government deeded to the state in 1959. Michels said Mitch Erickson has provided the city with documentation of such roads that should be in Bahnke's office.

Erickson, who serves as executive director of the Nome Chamber of Commerce, thanked the council for allowing Norton Sound Health Corp. to use the Recreation Center for its 40th anniversary celebration. He said four people had manually handed down 684 chairs from a platform to the floor in preparation for the NSHC banquet.

Erickson said that years ago when he was involved in preparations for the annual Iditarod Sled Dog Race banquet, the bank he managed, NSHC and Kawerak each had contributed $3,000 to purchase tables and chairs for the banquet, and the City of Nome had provided matching funds. He said the city also had agreed to build a facility at the northeast corner of the Recreation Center to store the tables and chairs, but that did not happen. He asked that the city consider building such a facility so tables and chairs can be moved in and out easily.

Congratulations!

Congratulations to Norton Sound Health Corporation Board of Directors on your 40th Anniversary celebration.

McAdams in the Senate seat over Miller. McAdams outpolled Miller in nearly all the region's voting precincts, grabbing 19.9 percent of the regional vote compared to Miler's 13.1 percent. Those figures, however, buck the statewide trend which put McAdams far enough behind Miller and the write-in count that he conceded the race.

Like other rural areas of the state, Nome and the region performed as expected for Murkowski. The incumbent enjoyed wide support in the Bush and especially from Alaska Native corporations and organizations. She received an endorsement from the Alaska Federation of Natives and was given a large platform at the organization's statewide meeting in October in Fairbanks.

There were other races on the ballot

While the Senate race has gobbled up all the media attention this election season, Alaskans and Norton Sound residents did decide on some other important seats. The region leaned more Democratic in the governor's race, giving 48.3 percent of its vote to Ethan Berkowitz and Diane Benson over the Republican team of Gov. Sean Parnell and Mead Treadwell who earned 43.1 percent in the region. Those figures contrasted sharply with the statewide tally which easily handed Parnell an elected term in the governor's office with nearly 59 percent of the vote.

The region's voters also disagreed with the majority of the state on Ballot Measure 1, which would have expanded the state Legislature by six seats. The region voted 56.7 percent for the measure while statewide it went down with nearly 60 percent voting against it.

Norton Sound voters joined the rest of the state in sending Rep. Don Young back to Congress. The region gave Young a whopping 80 percent of its vote. Statewide, Young earned nearly 69 percent of votes compared to Democrat Harry Crawford's 19 percent. Crawford's lackluster campaign barely made a peep in Western Alaska.

The region's voters sent Neal Foster back to Juneau for an elected term to the state House of Representatives. Foster was running unopposed after winning a primary race against Vincent Beans of Mountain Village.

Nome and the region's voters also approved the two bond propositions on the ballot, one for financing mortgages for veterans and the other to build educational and research facilities throughout the state.

Overall, turnout for the region registered at 48 percent compared to 41.4 percent statewide. Elim had the highest turnout in the region at 71 percent with 116 votes cast out of the village's 163 registered voters. Diomede, in contrast, had 25 percent turnout with 20 of 80 registered voters casting ballots. Nome had turnouts of 39.7 percent in precinct 1 and 44.5 percent in precinct 2.

Pick a name, any name

Nearly 200 people filed in the Senate race as write-in candidates. Of the 199 who filed, 39 were rejected for various reasons, most often for incomplete paperwork, filing too late or not meeting the age requirement for the seat (a candidate must be 30 years old to run for the Senate). The 160 candidates who were accepted as write-ins were predominantly Republicans or not affiliated with an organized party, along with a smattering of Libertarians and Democrats.

And while the write-in ballots are not to be examined until Nov. 10, it's safe to say Murkowski likely outpolled candidates like Republican Curtis G. "Champagne" Champagne and independent Willard H. "Bill" Wamsganz Sr.—who may have had an even more challenging spelling lesson to deliver than the current senator.

NSEDC's slow growth trend continues in 3rd quarter

REGIONAL

Stock market profits of $3.6 million this year down from $9.5 million in 2009

Laurie McNicholas

The Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board of directors received a favorable financial report from the company's controller, Rick Walicki, at their third quarter meeting last week in Nome.

Walicki said NSEDC's assets and liabilities totaled $161.2 million on Sept. 30, with $18.8 million in liabilities and net assets of $142.4 million. The net assets figure includes accrued royalties for fisheries harvests completed by Sept. 30 for which NSEDC had not yet received revenues, Walicki noted.

Walicki's practice of accruing anticipated revenues prior to receiving them can result in a significantly higher net worth figure for NSEDC on Sept. 30 than on Dec. 31. For example, last year he reported net assets of $138.6 million through Sept. 30 that included several million dollars in accrued royalties, but NSEDC ended 2009 with net assets of $134.7 million (nearly $4 million less than he reported for Sept. 30).

Last week Jack Carpenter, at-large member of NSEDC's finance committee, asked Walicki what revenues he anticipates in the fourth quarter.

"It's looking like it's at the 2009 level," Walicki replied. "We bought cod quota. I am not aware of additional harvest from that quota yet."

Siu Alaska Corp., NSEDC's wholly owned for-profit subsidiary, bought 50 percent of the C/P Glacier Bay's fishing rights in the Bering Sea Pacific cod fishery under the federal License Limitation Program (LLP) from Glacier Fish Co. this year after GFC decided to get out of cod fishing. Siu previously owned 50 percent of the vessel's LLP cod. NSEDC also receives a share of the annual total allowable catch of Pacific cod in the Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands area as a member of the Western Alaska Community Development Quota (CDQ) Program.

Jon Zuck, CDQ management consultant, said Alaska Leader Fisheries has harvested part of NSEDC's CDQ cod allocation, currently is harvesting LLP cod, and will take the remainder of the company's CDQ cod later this year under a short contract for the B season.

Zuck said GFC completed the 2010 harvest of NSEDC's CDQ pollock allocation (2.2 percent of the TAC) and GFC's pollock quota (6.2 percent of the TAC) in early September. Pollock royalties generate most of NSEDC's yearly CDQ revenues.

Securities portfolio report

Walicki reported a $3.6 million gain in the value of NSEDC's securities investments through Sept. 30 of this year, compared to a gain of $9.5 million through Sept. 30, 2009. "2009 was a comeback year," he noted. NSEDC suffered stock market losses of $5.2 million in 2007 and $16.4 million in 2008.

Walicki said all managers of the corporation's securities investments achieved 5 percent growth in the groups of stocks assigned to them, but NSEDC withdrew $2 million for operations from the portfolio managed by Charles Schwab. He said August, September and October were good months for stock investments. He pegged the total value of NSEDC's securities at $67.6 million through Sept. 30, compared to $66 million at the beginning of this year.

Financing bulk fuel program

Walicki said notes receivable totaled $13.4 million on Sept. 30, an increase of $8 million compared to $5.4 million on Sept. 30. 2009. Notes receivable for the Bulk Fuel Program totaled $6.5 million on Sept. 30, and the company will pay an additional $3.8 million to Delta Western for a barge load of fuel, he noted.

For several years NSEDC has consolidated fuel orders from qualifying program participants, requested proposals from fuel suppliers and awarded a contract for fuel deliveries to participants in an effort to reduce the cost of NSEDC's exposure and liability while keeping the program going. It brings huge benefits to communities, and communities are grateful for it, she added. She said staff will present ideas for restructuring the program to the board at a future meeting.

"We wanted to save money on the barge delivery cost," noted Henry Ivanoff, at-large member of the NSEDC finance committee. "Are we?

Dan Harrelson, NSEDC's board chairman and president, said he thinks the fuel was landed for $2.82, and the price would be significantly higher for those who do not participate in the Bulk Fuel Program. "But ANICA, who's selling fuel [in White Mountain where Harrelson resides] charges $4.97 at the pump," he added. "That's a 39 percent markup on fuel. We went to the IRA and explained. They lowered the price by 50 to 60 cents a gallon." He said Nome is addressing a similar problem. On Oct. 25 the Nome Common Council directed the city's attorney to draft a revision of a city ordinance to allow Nome Joint Utility System to deley is charging $5 a gallon for diesel fuel and $4.95 a gallon for gasoline.

Harrelson asked whether NSEDC can tell sellers of fuel received through the bulk fuel program not to exceed a certain profit margin.

"That gets into running other people's business," Ivanoff replied.

Carpenter asked if NSEDC has sufficient cash to meet its payment obligations, noting that Walicki had said cash on hand decreased by $4.1 million since the first of the year and stood at $6 million on Sept. 30.

Ivanoff replied that expenses had peaked in summer months due to the fishing season and payments for bulk fuel shipments, but cash flow would rebuild in winter months as loans are repaid.

Financing Siu ventures

Walicki said NSEDC's notes payable included $6.8 million for Siu Alaska Corp. through Sept. 30. He said Siu had repaid $1.2 of the $8 million line of credit used to buy GFC's 50 percent share of the Glacier Bay's LLP cod.

At the board meeting held last July in Nome, Walicki said Siu had drawn on its line of credit with Wells Fargo Bank for about $8 million, invested more than $2 million in the C/P Glacier Bay for debt payment, and at the same time purchased $6.1 million worth of quota shares.

The NSEDC board approved a motion by Don Stiles to refresh Siu's line of credit by $6.7 million by a 14-1 vote at the July meeting. Teller's board member Joe Garnie voted against the motion. Stiles represents Nome on the NSEDC board and serves as chairman of the Siu board.

Last week the NSEDC board discussed a business proposal from Siu in executive session and then voted 14-1 to authorize increasing the guaranteed line of credit for Siu to $16 million and to authorize Siu to purchase crab quota in an amount not to exceed $11 million. Siu President John Eckels gave the NSEDC board a brief report in a public session last week. He said the processing plant that Siu purchased at Dutch Harbor this year in partnership with Copper River Seafoods will open as scheduled on Jan. 1, 2011. The plant, called Bering Fisheries, initially will process crab and Pacific cod, according to the fall 2010 edition of NSEDC News.

Eckels said the Aleutian No. 1 is on it sixth brown crab harvesting trip and will make two more trips before completing work in the eastern Aleutians by the end of November. Siu expects to receive an ex-vessel price of at least $1 more per pound for the crab than last year, he added. He said the vessel will fish for opilio crab in January and for brown crab in the western Aleutians in February.

The Glacier Bay is moored in Seattle and up for sale, Eckels reported. He said Siu and GFC each own half of the vessel. The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration chartered the Pacific Star for a survey for 60 days this year, Eckels noted. He said three businesses tried unsuccessfully to market the ship for additional charters on Siu's behalf. Noting that the vessel needs to be chartered for 150 days a year to break even, Eckels said a discussion of what to do with the vessel is ongoing.

GFC is harvesting hake for the third time this year and has two trips left, Eckels reported. He said the company does not expect to make much of a profit this year due to the low pollock TAC, but is holding its own. The potential TAC increase for pollock in 2011 excites GFC and all other pollock companies, he added.

Garnie asked Eckels when NSEDC can expect to receive a significant profit distribution from Siu. Eckels said that depends a lot on GFC, Siu's biggest investment. Siu holds NSEDC's 37.5 percent ownership interest in GFC. Siu's other investments are small and will show yields, he added.

Eckels said GFC is not generating much cash due to a low pollock TAC, depressed market prices and debt payments for the C/P Alaska Ocean. GFC purchased the huge factory trawler and its pollock quota in 2008.

Community benefit share

The NSEDC board approved a community benefit share of $100,000 for each of the corporation's 15 member communities.

fuel for residents of communities in the region. The corporation charges no interest or fees to participants for administration of the program. Participants reimburse NSEDC for their fuel orders in 12 monthly payments.

In January 2010 the NSEDC board authorized staff to obtain a line of credit from a bank to accommodate a 4 million gallon fuel order from Bonanza Fuel of Nome, a new participant in the program. Chief Executive Officer Janis Ivanoff explained that at a cost of $2 to $3 per gallon, the Bonanza Fuel order would total up to $12 million, so NSEDC would need a line of credit to meet cash flow demands.

In November 2009 the NSEDC board approved a request from Nome Joint Utility System Manager John Handeland to finance the purchase of 1 million gallons of fuel from Delta Western for $2.45 million under terms of the Bulk Fuel Program. Although Handeland already had placed the NJUS order through Delta Western, the board decided to finance it to save NJUS $70,000 to $80,000 in interest. Ivanoff explained that the interest saved will translate to savings of $7 to $8 a month for NJUS customers.

This year 30 participants ordered $14 million worth of fuel under the program, Ivanoff reported. She said staff has discussed ways to limit liver fuel to Nome residents along with power, water and sewer services, as reported in The Nome Nugget (Oct. 28 edition, pp. 1, 5). The NJUS board approved a similar proposal on Oct. 19.

The board discussed recent fuel price increases of approximately 50 cents a gallon by local vendors, while NJUS saw a reduction in price paid per gallon for this year's fuel, which ran at $2.562 a gallon (vendor price plus port fee)," The Nugget reported. The story includes photos of pump prices showing Bonanza Fuel is charging $5 a gallon for gasoline and $5 a gallon for diesel fuel, and Crow-

Serpentine meeting draws out pilots' concerns

A team working to gather opinions from the region's residents on how they use Serpentine Hot Springs and how they would like to see access improved to the site received a nearly singular response from an audience in Nome—fix the runway.

The National Park Service, which manages the hot springs found within the Bering Land Bridge National Preserve, has hired engineering and services firm URS Corp. to facilitate meetings throughout the region regarding the hot springs and its future. The effort to gather public input is in advance of the park service retooling its management plan for the entire preserve. How the hot springs located in the south-central portion of the preserve are used will likely be one of the more heavily debated parts of the update. The current management plan dates back to 1986, according to park Superintendent Jeanette Pomrenke.

The hot springs are a popular draw, attracting visitors from around the region. Many from Nome access the site by plane or by riding snowmachines in the winter. Four-wheelers and other motorized land vehicles are not permitted in the preserve. The springs host a large bunkhouse as well as a bathhouse for soaking

Having the runway emerge as the central focus of the meeting was not surprising, as half of the approximately 30 attendees at Old St. Joe's Hall Saturday morning were pilots. The aviators voiced concern over the runway's condition-it is in need of drainage improvements—as well as the park service's rules and regulations that they said at best are onerous and a nuisance, and at worst a hazard. "Who wants to get fined for landing hot springs. "We need a safe landing strip," she said. "That is a wonderful hot spring and we should not be kept out of it.

Pomrenke agreed that runway improvements are in order and noted that doing so could spur more commercial flight operators to offer charters to the springs and create more competitive prices. She said the challenge would be working around federal rules and regulations to carry out

"Don't look at these things as barriers, look at them as to-dos." - Roy Ashenfelter on a substandard runway?" asked Judy Martinson, who recounted a story of a stuck pilot getting fined for his efforts to free his plane.

Most at the meeting, pilots or not, agreed that improvements to the landing strip are in order. Nancy McGuire lamented that a flight is really the only way she is able to access the springs. There are currently no commercial flight operators out of Nome-and only one at all, based out of Kotzebue-that will fly to the any such improvements. Pomrenke said getting gravel into the park or sourcing it from within the boundaries both were challenging in the face of federal requirements.

Nome resident Roy Ashenfelter argued that all the required permits and hoops that must be jumped through should not stop the park service from pursuing improvements. "Don't look at these things as barriers, look at them as to-dos," Ashenfelter said, promoting a longterm plan to make changes.

Ashenfelter also noted the importance of reliable transportation into the springs for allowing elders to visit the site. He said the area has an important stature as a healing center for Alaska Natives. "You're going to miss out on a very enlightening opportunity for those people as they get old," he said.

While Ashenfelter was up for offering suggestions, such as an area advisory committee to give local input on decision-making for the preserve, he also questioned the value of Saturday's effort. This was not the first time he has sat through a meeting to discuss the future of the hot springs. "Isn't this the third or fourth discussion?" he asked. "It's already happened several times. Nothing ever comes out of it except another meeting.'

That viewpoint was shared by Jay Wieler who asked if the exercise could yield a road into the hot springs. "Or is this just more government hot air?'

Taylor Brelsford, the project manager for URS, said that while there is no plan on the table at this point—be it for a road, an improved air strip, or anything else, for that matter-the current process is collecting all comments and suggestions, as well as examining past meetings, to gather input for the management plan update. The current effort, funded by a $90,000 federal Department of Transportation grant, is a sort of prelude to the plan's update.

In addition to access issues, the meeting was aimed at gauging how residents felt about future uses at the springs. Kevin Busk said he did not want to see the current isolated feel of the area be lost to development. "I don't want to see big infrastructure out there," he said. "I want access, but I don't want to lose the natural setting."

While the Nome meeting largely focused on the concerns of pilots, comments at previous meetings held elsewhere in the region were largely directed at the use of the hot springs as a place for healing and renewal.

Nome is not the only community where comments are being taken on Serpentine. The park service and URS had already traveled to Kotzebue and Deering, and held a telecon-ference with Buckland before hosting the Nome meetings. Meetings were also slated for Shishmaref, Wales and Brevig Mission. A draft of the findings from the study are due out in February with a final plan to be submitted by March 31. The results of the study will then be used as the park service updates its general management plan for the preserve.

NACTEC Simulator Center

By Nathan Pitt Educational Technologist, NACTEC

The NACTEC House is crawling with CATS. No, not the cute, cuddly, furry type. These CATS are more closely related to the kinds of machines that make or grade your roads and runways or dig new foundations for buildings. That's right, the NACTEC House is now home to eight brand new, state-of-the-art Caterpillar Simulators.

The simulators help students learn how to operate the different vehicles by first helping them learn the basic controls and then having them perform different tasks that simulate job sites and training courses. The computers automatically keep track of how well students do, record the results, and then give a more difficult challenge. The teachers and monitors can then see the progress made and the interest level of each student. This information guides students toward more training in construction or heavy vehicle operator training.

Climbing the stairs to the second story of the NACTEC House opens to an impressive sight. Walls are covered with 42 inch televisions. Authentic Caterpillar equipment in the form of seats, steering wheels, controls, and diamond plate floor panels fill the space that used to be an open game room. The game has changed. Now, after an intense day of focused academic classes, students can schedule time in the seat of an off-road dump truck, front-end loader, excavator, or grader. It is fun, but also educational.

Doug Walrath, NACTEC Director, said that the idea for the simulators came from some of NACTEC's partners. Superintendent of Nome Public Schools, Jon Wehde, President of Kawerak, Loretta Bullard, and Heavy Equipment Operator and NACTEC Advisory Board member Martin Aukongak of Golovin mentioned the need for heavy equipment operator training as a strong need in the region. Dr. Walrath discovered the Caterpillar Simulators and sawthe potential for tapping into student interest in video games as well as fulfilling a real and expressed need. Siu Alaska Corporation and Bering Straits Native Corporation helped provide funding for the new simulation center.

NACTEC's focus is on career exploration. While NACTEC does not provide professional vehicle operator training, it does offer the first exposure to heavy equipment operation for most students. The response has been very positive. After spending time on the CAT Simulators, quite a few students have added "heavy equipment operator" to their career interest profiles.

Karate Program

By Clint Shultz Chief Instructor

For the last year White Mountain has had the opportunity to participate with the American Bushido-Kai Karate Association. This Karate program is designed to nurture inner and outer strength, while building evangelism and discipleship. Currently Chief Instructor Clint Shultz and Assistant Instructor Samuel McElwee head the program. We are fortunate to have over 20 regular students participating in the program. To assist in training and testing of instructors and students, the ABKA has committed its time and fellowship to come up at least twice a year. The White Mountain ABKA is open to all students and community members, and we emphasize family participation.

The Arts Are Coming!

By Kim Sweeny-New Visions Grant Coordinator

Did you know that the arts enhance students' creativity and problem solving abilities? Or that the arts develop self-esteem and help students gain a more positive selfconcept? Did you know that the arts increase communication skills that are vitally needed in today's complex society? According to noted learning specialist Eric Jensen in his book Teaching with the Brain in Mind, "Teaching through the arts motivates children and increases their aptitude for learning."

In 2010 BSSD will launch its second year of the Artists in Schools New Visions Grant. This year's focus will be on integrating arts into content instruction and increasing staff development in the arts. BSSD superintendent Rob Picou supports the effort, stating that "education should not ever become a one size fits all box. The arts and creative expressions provide children and youth a venue for self expression and the freedom to believe in something greater than a textbook or a test score."

Artist in Schools residencies available to all sites; three separate working weekends wrapping language arts, science, math and social studies with arts learning; eight to ten ARTiculate art kits at each site; arts presenters at the October Ed Conference; Summer Arts Institutes opportunities for staff development; and a district Art Show and Arts Festivals as springtime events in many villages.

Leading the charge for this year's work will be the Arts Action team. Many other teachers and district office personnel have offered to be a part of our movement. We hope all staff will try to add some arts to their teaching menu this year. Arts just might be the spice you and your students have been looking for!

All Aboard!

By Rob Picou, Superintendent, BSSD

As I have traveled around the Bering Strait Region, I am in awe of the majestic beauty in the blue, orange sunset, the vast expanse of land, the endless ocean, and the many smiles of new friends I have met. I have noticed that though each community is unique and different, every community loves its children. I have heard it said, but do not agree, that it takes a village to raise a child because I have seen many single moms raise good children in difficult villages. However, I am absolutely certain that it takes an entire village to raise all the children in a village.

If the school is going to achieve academic success for all children, we need every member of the community to recognize the importance of education and to take responsibility for the education of the community's children. The school will not be successful as an island within the community. The school must become the heart of the community, and we all must work toward becoming one single heartbeat. Only by listening to and learning from each other will our schools become places where children love to learn. A school should be a place of joy and celebration.

Things You Can Do To Help Your School Become A Place of Joy and Celebration:

- 1) Read to your children. If you don't have any books in your house, go and see your principal. Every school has a library. Your principals will help you establish reading as a routine in your home.
- 2) Make sure your children get to bed at a reasonable hour. This is a hard one. You must turn off the television and video games. Please make an effort to get your children to bed between eight and ten o'clock depending on their age. Children can't learn when they do not have enough sleep. It is absolutely essential that we make sure children get the sleep that they need.
- 3) Get your children to school every single day. Make a hundred percent attendance a community goal.
- 4) Get to know your teachers. Invite them over for lunch or dinner. Ask them to bring a dish. Relationships are built around the kitchen table. Your teachers want to know you better, but they don't know how. Be the first to break the cultural divide and invite the teachers when you go hunting or fishing. I am sure you will find that your teachers are a lot of fun.

Never before in our nation's history has a child's survival been so critically connected to his or her ability to learn. Consequently, a child's survival is dependent upon our ability to teach. In preparing children for success in today's ever changing and challenging world, schools more than ever need the support of the family. We must teach for understanding and for diversity. We must teach all students to perform proficiently on the basic skills of reading, writing, and math and to deeply understand big ideas. We must also teach in ways that help different kinds of learners find productive paths to success as they learn to live constructively in their communities. But the school cannot do it alone. We need the family.

Regardless of race and culture, our biological ancestors relied on extended family teams that were led by parents to educate children. Because the child was considered an extension of parents, grandparents, and tribe, a child's education was an extension of his or her blood relationships. There is conclusive research that warns of a crisis when the family is allowed to drift away from its attachments and responsibility in the education of its children. The great challenge before us today is to bring the family into the classroom and the classroom into the family.

Community Goals:

- 1) Hundred Percent Attendance of Well Rested Students.
- 2) All Children on Grade Level in Reading By the Third Grade.
- 3) Hundred Percent Graduation with a Diploma that Represents Relevant Life Choices.

There is no doubt that these are some very high goals for any community. I believe we can achieve these goals. When I think about the amazing ingenuity and hard work the ancestors of this region had to demonstrate in order to survive back before the region had electricity, I am certain that there is nothing we cannot accomplish if we all work together. The Inupiaq and Yupik people have always faced adversity, and they have survived for more than 400 years. The Bering Strait School District attracts some of the best and brightest teachers in the country. As educators, we need to find ways of capitalizing on the rich cultural heritage of the Inupiaq and Yupik people. If we can find a way to build a bridge between the school and the community and put the family back into the education of children, there is no doubt in my mind that all children will achieve extraordinary levels of academic success.

The family in the classroom, the classroom in the family. We must become the one single heartbeat.

The Community of St. Michael Celebrates

The community of St. Michael attended a special celebration Friday, September 10th. They celebrated their school no longer being designated as a school in need of improvement by the state department of education. Anthony A. Andrews School was one of only twelve schools in the state that could celebrate moving from a level 5 status back to a level 0 status.

To mark the special occasion, many community organizations and members contributed to a wonderful potluck dinner. In addition, each student received a "Storm Pride" shirt and the entire community took a panoramic picture to mark the special occasion. It was great event enjoyed by all!

NSEDC postpones elections of board and corporate officers

Open board seats in Brevig Mission and Shaktoolik delay process

By Laurie McNicholas

The board of directors of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. planned to elect officers of the board and the corporation at their annual directors meeting Nov. 5 in Nome. However, two board seats that were up for election on Oct. 5 have not yet been filled, so the board decided to postpone elections of officers pending the outcomes of special elections in Brevig Mission and Shaktoolik.

The City of Brevig Mission will select its NSEDC board member in a special election on Nov. 16. City Clerk Allen Okpealuk said the election originally scheduled Oct. 5 was canceled because the city's printer ran out of toner and ballots could not be printed. The candidates are incumbent Reggie Barr, Walter Seetot and Warren S. Rock.

The Oct. 5 election for the Shaktoolik board seat resulted in a 54-54 tie between the incumbent Harvey Sookiayak and his only opponent, Eugene Asicksik, a former president and chief executive officer of NSEDC. Questioned ballots were included in the vote counts for both the city election and the NSEDC board seat election, according to City Clerk Rita Auliye.

Auliye said a Shaktoolik voter contested the election because the questioned ballots were cast by individuals who were ineligible to vote. They had not registered to vote 30 days prior to the Oct. 5 election and they were not listed on the precinct registry, she explained.

The Shaktoolik City Council met on Nov. 5 and decided not to certify the Oct. 5 election, Auliye reports. On Monday she told The Nome Nugget she plans to discuss the council's decision with Leroy Seppilu, local government specialist with the Alaska Dept. of Community and Regional Affairs in Nome.

Auliye said Seppilu has told her the Shaktoolik City Council probably will not be able to schedule a special election for at least 60 days because the request must go to the U.S. Dept. of Justice for pre-clearance. Seppilu met with the city council in Shaktoolik on Oct. 19, but two council members were out of town, so the council took no action on the Oct. 5 election.

Sookiayak holds a seat designated for an NSEDC board member on the corporation's for-profit subsidiary, Siu Alaska Corp. Sookiayak's seat was up for election at Siu's annual shareholders meeting on Nov. 5, but the NSEDC board decided to postpone the election for that seat until Shaktoolik elects its NSEDC representative. The NSEDC board reelected Ike Towarak of Unalakleet to the Siu board. Towarak is not affiliated with NSEDC.

Don Stiles publicly asks for update on Teller withdrawing from NSEDC

Joe Garnie says the NSEDC board discussed the issue in executive session

By Laurie McNicholas

During the annual members meeting of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. Nov. 5 in Nome, Don Stiles said he is curious about a discussion last April about Teller withdrawing from NSEDC. "Is there any update?" he asked. He said there was some discussion of the minutes of the City of Teller. "It's a big deal," he added. Stiles represents Nome on the NSEDC board; Joe Garnie represents Teller.

Nome and Teller are among 15 member communities in the Bering Strait region represented by NSEDC in the Western Alaska Community Development Quota (CDQ) Program. The program receives annual allocations of 10.7 percent of the total allowable catch (TAC) in the lucrative pollock fishery and lower percentages of the TACs for other groundfish and crab fisheries in the Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands area.

Dan Harrelson of White Mountain, NSEDC's board chairman and president said the company has heard nothing from the Teller community since the April board meeting.

The last conversation we had was in Unalakleet in executive session, and that's where it should remain," Garnie stated. He said the topic is not on the members meeting agenda, so nothing has been prepared to address it.

The members meeting lasted about 15 minutes. It was immediately followed by NSEDC's annual directors meeting, with an agenda providing for public comments. Nome resident Tim Smith said he is really interested in Stiles' comment about one or more communities separating from NSEDC.

Smith said the Central Bering Sea Fishermen's Assn. represents one community in the CDQ program and does well, and the Aleutian Pribilof Island Community Development Association represents five communities with a combined population of about 1,000 persons in the CDQ program. He asked whether NSEDC would oppose separation of a member community from the corporation.

Harrelson said NSEDC does not have a position on the issue and has not examined legal questions about

Oscar Takak of Elim said he remembers the topic on the agenda of one of the meetings. He said he strongly discouraged Teller from withdrawing from NSEDC, and it kind of died after that.

Smith asked how much of NSEDC's assets a community that withdrew from the corporation would receive.

Harrelson said NSEDC has not considered that question.

Smoker's dementia: new study links heavy smoking and Alzheimer's disease

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

You may have heard of the smoker's cough, that persistent raspy clearing of tar-stained phlegm heard in long-term smokers, but according to new research we may be hearing more about the smoker's dementia.

In short, the data, published last month in the Archives of Internal Medicine, shows that middle-aged heavy smokers are more than twice as likely to develop dementia than nonsmokers or smokers who have quit.

The study began in the late 1970s and early 1980s when 21,123 fifty-and sixty-year-old patients from Kaiser Permanente, a California-based healthcare network, were interviewed regarding their smoking habits.

Thirty years later, researchers revisited the medical records of these patients to determine who developed dementia and who did not. Dementia is a form of memory loss that is caused by a loss of brain function over time. There are two basic forms of dementia: Alzheimer's disease caused by abnormal proteins clogging the network of nerves in the brain and vascular dementia caused by poor blood flow through the brain due to mini-strokes or plaque formation in the arteries of the brain.

The study found that smoking increases the risk of developing both types of dementia. The risk begins to appear in those who smoke a half pack per day and progressively increases to a doubling of risk in people who smoke over two packs per day.

It is important to understand that studies like this are designed to exclude any confounding factors. Therefore the study is showing that a person who smokes is at increased risk of developing dementia even if the person has a perfect blood pressure with no sign of diabetes, has a normal cholesterol level, maintains an ideal body weight, eats a healthy diet, and exercises on a regular basis. The authors point out that the risk of dementia is likely underestimated in this study because many patients who smoke are more likely to die from other diseases associated with the tobacco use like heart attacks, strokes, pancreatic cancer, and lung cancer. Some patients may have died with dementia, not from dementia, from some other cause before the end of the study.

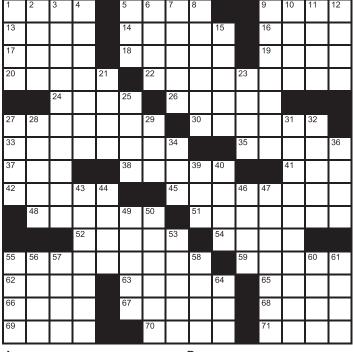

Here is the good news. Quitting smoking by mid-life reduced the risk of developing dementia. Smokers who quit had the same risk as those who never smoked. Thus the new data presents another powerful reason to stop smoking.

An estimated 10 million to 20 million birds and other animals die each year from lead poisoning in the United States.

Scientists see high incidence of deformed beaks AP - Federal scientists say they're observing the highest rate of beak abnormalities ever recorded in wild bird populations in Alaska and the Northwest. U.S. Geological Survey scientists say they have not been able to determine the cause, and the deformed beaks could signal a growing environmental health problem.

Research biologist Colleen Handel says the prevalence of the deformities is more than 10 times above what is normally expected in a wild bird population. Black-capped chickadees, northwestern crows and other birds have been affected. Scientists call it "avian keratin disorder." in which the keratin layer of the beak becomes overgrown, resulting in elongated and often crossed beaks. The deformities affect birds' ability to feed and

David Kelly Tocktoo

Beloved son, brother, grandson, uncle, nephew, cousin and friend, David Kelly Tocktoo was born August 22,1997 to Stewart Raymond Tocktoo and Daphne Grace Tocktoo. He suddenly left to be with our Lord on October 16, 2010.

David was always playing out. He loved to play basketball, fishing and berry picking with his Gram. He also loved "bugging" his brother Junior (or whoever else was around).

David's dream was to become a pilot. He had said, "right after high school I will go to flight school. That way I can take anyone anywhere...as long as they buy gas."

He was affectionately known to many as "shik-shik" due to his speed and slyness in Eskimo baseball. He was so fast nobody was able to get him. He was also called "Davidee" by his "brother from another mother," Michael Dean.

David's sense of humor had a strong effect on everyone. He knew exactly what to do or say to put a smile on their face or make them laugh. He liked to make a joke out of anything he could; there was always a smile on his face too.

David's love for his nieces and nephew was unbelievably and unconditionally strong. He wouldn't say no to babysitting them when asked. But he especially loved and would look forward to babysitting Jason without hesitation, as he did with his nieces and nephew.

David also had a knack for baking. He would get upset if any birthday cake got baked and he didn't make it.

David Kelly will be greatly missed by everyone. Although he lived such a short life, he taught all those around him what fun life could be, only if you make it happen. His smile will forever be etched in our memories; his love is pierced in our hearts forever.

He was preceded in death by great-grandparents James S. and Margaret K. Picnalook, grandma Pollyanna Tocktoo, great-uncle James K. Picnalook, cousins Jamie Kakoona, Daniel Tocktoo, Elton Olanna Jr., David Adsuna and halfbrother and sister Justin and Halla Dee Ahnangnatoguk.

James Peter Adsuna was born on October 27, 1954. He was the second oldest of five children. He left to be with the Lord on October 20,

James was an all around handyman. If it had wires and was broken, he would find a way to fix it. He worked on the BIMA as a welder, and he was a merchant seaman for Kelly-Ryan out of Seattle. In 1998, he traveled by barge from Seattle all the way to Anchorage. He loved to go do any kind of fishing. After his health problems he was limited to do certain things, which he didn't like. He stayed at home reading and was a real whiz at crossword puzzles. He really enjoyed helping out with anything. The past few years he lived with Dilly and Jerry, learning from Jerry as Jerry learned from him. He had nicknames for all his nephews, nieces and cousins.

He is survived by his sisters Dilly, Joann and MaryJo, brother Don Pierce, his children whom he loved so much, Jobeth, Jordan, Jennifer, Janis and Jamie; nephews Jeremy Anderson, Peter Adsuna, Garrett Adsuna, Thomas and Jerry Asila, George and Dennis Kost, and James Pierce; nieces January, Janeen and Lynae.

Uncle Dee will be greatly missed by everyone. May he rest in peace.

Car and muskox collide —again

By Tyler Rhodes

Once again man and musk ox have tangled on the Nome-Teller Highway, leaving one animal dead and a car badly damaged.

The Nome Police Department responded early Tuesday morning to a vehicle-animal collision on the highway approximately 1/2 mile north of the Nome Bypass Road, across from the approximate center point of the runway at City Field. The '92 Toyota Land Cruiser was driven by Dr. Sia-

Nome Police Sergeant Byron Redburn said no person was injured in the accident, but noted that the injured musk ox had to be put down.

Redburn said the collision occurred within a couple hundred feet of a previous vehicle-musk ox accident that occurred Oct. 22. Both accidents took place in the dark, the most recent at 1 a.m., on one of Nome's rare straight stretches of paved highway. The section of road often invites motorists to drive at high speeds, further increasing the risk of a collision. "Fortunately this particular driver was traveling 25 to 30 mph, which is unusually slow for this area," Redburn said.

Redburn said drivers need to be aware that musk ox are still in the area and can cross the highway all along the stretch of road from the edge of Nome to Icy View. He said officers responding to the Tuesday morning accident were also surprised by musk ox crossing the road in front of their vehicle. "They're just darting across this thing at night," Redburn said.

Musk ox are dark in color and very difficult to spot at night. They also do not tend to flee when spooked and can linger in an area for extended periods. "You just don't see them, and 'bang' they're there," he Redburn said police contacted the Alaska State Troopers to arrange for someone to harvest the animal and give the meat to charity.

Champions crowned at BSSD wrestling/cheer tourney

Submitted by Jeffrey Erickson

Rarely can one bring 250 elementary and junior high athletes together and not have utter chaos. For almost 30 years the Bering Strait School District Elementary/Jr. High Wrestling and Cheerleading Tournament has attempted to manage this chaos.

It is an event that is a highlight on the calendar of all interested fans. Wrestlers and cheerleaders have grown up, had their own children and now send them back to compete. Young athletes from across the region prepare for weeks, looking forward to the week of the competition with anticipation.

The 2010 version disappointed no one other than, perhaps, those who didn't make it to the winner's podium. From the tiniest grappler and cheerleader to the eighth grade veterans, the efforts and desire showed in every face.

The seed bout session Nov. 2 was a sight to behold. There were four matches going simultaneously with more than 80 cheerleaders ringing the mats cheering for the wrestlers. By the end of the night, coaches were better prepared to seed the tournament and get down to the main event.

Wrestling tournaments are diverse athletic competitions. One can see the lithe, energetic lightweights; the strength and athleticism of the middleweights; and the raw power of the heavier weight classes. This year there were more female wrestlers than ever, and they were a force to be reckoned with. There were so many pins by female wrestlers that it no longer was a point of embarrassment. In fact, six of the girls made it to the podium. New wrestlers emerged, sites that had been down for years regained their stature and second-generation athletes showed that genetics have something to do with success.

Cheerleaders from all sites also were afforded the opportunity to compete and participate in training clinics. Guest judge Chris Hebert, from Colony High School, provided great ideas and new techniques, bringing all the cheerleaders together for a group dance routine and better preparing both athlete and coach, alike, for future competitions.

When the dust cleared on Thursday night, things had been settled, with champions crowned in 20 different weight classes and multiple cheer events. For the eighth graders it was bittersweet as they knew they would never again experience the event as a participant, but for everyone else it just meant that they had a year to prepare for the next tournament.

School board mulls Christmas, the Pledge

By Tyler Rhodes

Each Monday Nome-Beltz students will again be asked to put their hands over their hearts and recite the Pledge of Allegiance.

Nome citizen Joe Lyon addressed the Nome Board of Education at its regular meeting Nov. 9 to ask that the pledge be recited at the high school each day. "I think it's important not only for students to know what the pledge is, but what it means," Lyon said.

Lyon said he had polled nine Bering Strait School District schools and found that eight of them did recite the pledge. Board member Betsy Brennan said the board's policy committee recently reviewed the applicable policy, which states the pledge shall be recited, or patriotic exercises conducted, on a regular basis as determined by the board. The board did not give any further direction as to how the policy should be carried out.

Nome-Beltz Principal Steve Gast said he would reinstate the practice,

As a half dozen men worked their jigs to pull tomcod out from under the ice Nov. 11, Rolland Trowbridge sat at the opposite end of Nome's small boat harbor also preparing to go to work.

The difference between the men's task was apparent in their footwear. While the fishermen largely wore bunny boots to guard against the cold, Trowbridge had on a pair of flippers as he readied to dive under the ice. Systematically, diving in a series of triangular holes cut in the ice, Trowbridge was covering the entire small boat harbor to search for signs of a missing man from Savoonga.

After approximately a half dozen days of volunteer diving by Trowbridge yielded no results, police have ruled out the harbor as a possible location where 20-year-old Jeconiah Annogiyuk may have been found. "That area has been pretty much accounted for," said Nome Police Sergeant Byron Redburn. With a search of the harbor complete, Redburn said the police department is not planning any further organized searches.

Annogiyuk went missing Oct. 29, the same day he arrived in Nome to shop for clothing. He was last seen stumbling away from the Subway

Dear Editor.

As KNOM prepares to separate from the Diocese of Fairbanks, it has become clear that a common misconception exists regarding the funding of KNOM. KNOM does not receive any subsidy from the Diocese of Fairbanks, the Vatican, or any other authority of the Catholic Church. KNOM has been completely self-supporting through the generous donations of contributors, mostly from the lower-48, for the past 15 years.

While it is true that the Diocese of Fairbanks did subsidize KNOM when it first went on the air, the bulk of the funding of KNOM's first two decades of operation came from support volunteers, mostly nurses who worked at the hospital and donated their entire salaries to keep KNOM on the air. In the mid-80s, support volunteers became scarce and KNOM turned to appeals from the mail to fill the budget gaps. Meancontinued on page 13

What's the Plan, Sam?

The City wants to know what we want, which way to go and how we want to get there. Is it a long way to go with a short time to get there? What's the five-year plan? Do we have a 10-year plan? The City wants to know and we really ought to tell them. We can do that by following the directions in the survey ad in this paper. Let's get in gear. There are plans and there are priorities. There are long-range and short-range goals. We should keep in mind that the main objective is to keep us happy about our town. If we are happy with our town we will be happy with our own selves. If our homes are in good order we will be happy citizens. If our town is in good order we will all feel better.

We could start with an easy fix for Front Street by getting rid of that butt ugly Wein Building across from City Hall. One wonders how city employees can stand looking at it every day. The impression it makes on visitors can't be good, yet we've not arranged for anyone to steal it and drag it to the landfill. We could also dispose of some of those firetraps on Second Avenue and other parts of town. It's really a shame that we have not forced their owners to invest in a crowbar and a couple sledgehammers. These places are accidents waiting to happen and need to be gone. We need to have more civic pride. These buildings are not historic treasures. We need to have a realistic, right now immediate clean-up and fix-up plan for downtown. A paintbrush and some Sherwin Williams can do wonders. Are there incentives? Maybe a property tax break or two would help. Some park benches and some flowerpots would help. What about historic old time lampposts? What about city-funded sidewalk snowplowing for winter walking safety? What about foot patrols for the safety of our citizens?

Sure, there are a lot of things to do, but we need more than just talk. So, what's the plan? Let city hall know and let's get to work on it. Start thinking and planning. We need to overcome our inertia and get the ball rolling. - N.L.M.

News from around the state of Alaska

Compiled by Diana Haecker Murkowski still leads, Miller still challenges

In the race for U.S. Senate, incumbent Lisa Murkowski maintains the majority of ballots cast as write-ins. While the ballot count is not over until Wednesday and official election results are not certified, political pundits already congratulate Murkowski on the feat to win as a writein candidate over Tea Party backed Republican candidate Joe Miller. As of press time on Monday, Murkowski leads with nearly 98 percent of write-ins in her name. As election workers in Juneau counted the write-in ballots, Miller observers challenged ballots, even when they seemed perfectly filled out and legible to election workers. The number of challenged write-in ballots is 7,059. Votes challenged and not counted by the Division of Elections are 1,740 - those have a name filled in, but not the oval. Election workers found 90 percent of the write-in ballots for Lisa Murkowski perfectly filled out.

In unofficial results as of Monday, 90,448 votes were cast for Joe Miller and the total number of write-ins stands at 102,028 votes. Democrat Scott McAdams got 59,817 votes, or 23.45 percent of the votes. As of Monday, 8,600 absentee ballots remain to be counted. The Division of Elections planned to wrap up the absentee and questioned ballots counts on Wednesday, past The Nome Nugget's deadline. Despite indicators pointing to a win of the Murkowski campaign, Joe Miller shows no sign of conceding the race

The Miller campaign filed a lawsuit in federal court against the state over how the Division of Elections counts write-in ballots. Last week, Anchorage U.S. District Court Judge Ralph Beistline tossed out a request by Miller to stop the state Division of Elections from counting write-in ballots that don't use the exact spelling of a candidate's name. Miller disputes the state's opinion that voter intent trumps a perfectly spelled ballot.

The state challenges Miller's lawsuit, saying he can't file against the write-in count in a federal court. The Alaska Federation of Natives also weighed in and intervened in the lawsuit against the state, saying that Miller tries to disenfranchise Alaska Natives by invalidating their votes if they are not perfectly spelled. Miller also claims election fraud and manipulation. Observers on the Miller team alleged that ballots cast for Murkowski were written in the same handwriting and that a ballot box was unattended at the Tanana Valley Fairgrounds. The same observer also claimed the voting machine jammed several times and its counter malfunctioned. Last week, federal judge case, citing his negative opinion of Miller.

Oil and gas proponents turn out to testify for OCS drilling

The Mineral Management Service, the federal agency that regulates oil and gas drilling offshore has released a new analysis of development in the Chukchi Sea. A group of 15 conservation and Alaska Native groups filed a lawsuit, challenging the original environmental analysis for not sufficiently covering oil spill response, endangered species impacts and climate change issues. The courts ordered a supplemental environmental impact statement, which now is out for public review

Nearly 180 people turned out for a hearing in Anchorage that was hosted by the Bureau of Ocean Energy Management to gather public input regarding the Outer Continental Shelf development. Most supported the opening of OCS for exploratory oil drilling. The purpose of the hearing was to collect input for a supplemental Environmental Impact Statement. Proponents of oil and gas exploration argued that jobs and American energy independency are on the line, whereas opponents said that oil and gas development in the Chukchi and Beaufort Seas harbors too many unknown factors that could lead to potential environmental disasters. The public comment period is open until November 30.

Pew Environment Group cautions US to plunge into resource development in Arctic Ocean

At the heart of every discussion regarding oil and gas development in the Chukchi, Beaufort and Arctic Ocean is the question of how to prevent and contain oil spills. The Pew Environment Group last week released a study called "Oil Spill Prevention and Response in ΩΩthe U.S. Arctic Ocean: Unexamined Risks, Unacceptable Consequences."

The new report puts forth four recommendations, saying that federal resource management agencies must complete a comprehensive science plan before any oil and gas exploration and development could proceed; that oil spill risk assessments and spill prevention plans should reflect Arctic conditions and should be tailored to arctic conditions. The report also recommends that review and oversight of oil and gas operations in the Arctic should be enhanced. Marilyn Heiman. director of the Pew Environment Group's offshore energy reform efforts, called on the U.S. Senate to pass offshore energy legislation. Mark Begich said that Pew's report echoes many of his recommendations contained in legislation pending before Congress. He disagrees with Pew's insistence on an unspecified moratorium on Arctic development, saying that the perfect set of conditions would simply never occur. The report is posted online at www.pewtrusts.org.

State gets convictions on two repeat sex offenders

Making good on the threat to crack down on domestic violence and sexual abuse, the state can chalk up two more convictions of repeat sex offenders. Victor Olson and Lennie Lane were recently convicted in Alaska courts. Olson was convicted of attempted sexual assault of a three year-old child. Olson, whose court documents were filed in Bethel, had two prior convictions related to sexual abuse of a minor. Lennie Lane was convicted of sexual assault in the first degree and the second degree, and tampering with physical evidence, in a case involving a brutal beating and rape of a woman in December 2008. Lane has three prior convictions, two for rape and one for attempted rape. His case was filed in Kotzebue. Olson and Lane are scheduled for sentencing early next year. The offenders look at a mandatory 99-year prison sentence.

Begich moves up in the ranks

U.S. Sen. Mark Begich has been named chairman of the U.S. Senate Democratic Steering and Outreach Committee. One of the key roles of the steering committee is working with community leaders and advocates from across the country to make sure that diverse opinions are heard. Begich said that with his appointment, the Senate leadership has recognized the uniqueness and value of the Alaskan viewpoint. Begich said his focus is on forming a national energy policy, better services for veterans, support for small businesses and job creation. The Alaskan Democrat was appointed chair of the committee by the Senate Democratic majority as part of the reorganization of the Senate after this month's elections.

orders and citations on a variety of matters. A list published on the MSHA website as of Nov. 15 does not detail the specifics behind the orders and citations, but it does refer to the section of the federal Mine Safety and Health Act inspectors believe was violated for each citation or order. Among the rules MSHA says were violated at Rock Creek are regulations covering electrical wiring, moving machine parts, clean workplaces and floors, the wearing of life jackets, locked gates at entry points and safe access to working places, as well as others.

Eight of the citations have a proposed monetary fine ranging from $100 to $1,304 for a total of $4,254. NovaGold has contested each of those proposed fines. Another 13 orders or citations have yet to be assessed for a monetary fine, according to the MSHA website.

MSHA found that one violation was serious enough to invoke a clause in mine safety law which prohibits most people from accessing a portion of the mine due to an imminent danger. The order was issued July 18 and terminated Sept. 15. Attempts to get details on this specific violation and others from both NovaGold and MSHA were not successful as of press time.

NovaGold was not the only entity working at Rock Creek to be cited by MSHA. Contractor Gregg Drilling and Testing Inc. was issued two $100 fines for a violation that allegedly ran afoul of MSHA rules regarding the storage of compressed or liquid gas containers. Greg Drilling and Testing paid the $200 in penalties.

The MSHA scrutiny at the mine comes as NovaGold is attempting to sell the property that has largely sat idle since November 2008 when NovaGold suspended progress on moving the mine toward production. Since the suspension of mining at the project, NovaGold has mainly worked to comply with environmental and permitting requirements mostly related to the management of water on the property.

In its financial report, NovaGold noted an asset impairment of $116.2 million in regard to Rock Creek. An asset impairment essentially refers to the estimated loss of value of a company's holding. NovaGold also noted in the report that as of the end of August it had spent $13.5 million at the mine for the year out of a total budget of $19.1 million.

While NovaGold is looking to sell the Rock Creek project, it is not marketing its other interests in the area, including significant land holdings, gravel operations and the Big Hurrah prospect located east of Nome.

Shaktoolik seeks Department of Justice pre-clearance for special election City council bypassed recommendation to certify Oct. 5 municipal election results

By Laurie McNicholas

Leroy Seppilu, local government specialist with the Alaska Division of Community and Regional Affairs is helping the City of Shaktoolik process a request to the U.S. Dept. of Justice for pre-clearance to schedule a special municipal election. The Shaktoolik City Council decided on Nov. 5 not to certify the municipal election held Oct. 5.

Alaska is among several states for which pre-clearance for special elections other than runoff elections is required for municipalities under Section 5 of the National Voting Rights Act of 1965. Seppilu explained that when Alaska was a U.S. territory, its voter eligibility laws included a discriminatory requirement that voters know how to speak and write in English.

Seppilu said that in the next two weeks he will provide technical assistance to the City of Shaktoolik to prepare paperwork requesting preclearance for a special election from the Dept. of Justice. The department asks for 60 days to review and respond to the request, but both the request and response can be transmitted electronically, he added.

Seppilu said 15 questioned ballots were cast during Shaktoolik's Oct. 5 election, but instead of being placed in questioned ballot envelopes per city ordinance, all of the questioned ballots were thrown into the official ballot box. Noting that election judges sometimes don't know how to handle questioned ballots, he said they knew enough to get the names of the 15 voters who were not on the registration list.

When City Clerk Rita Auliye sent the names to the Division of Elections, it was determined that three of the 15 questioned ballots had been cast by eligible voters and 12 had been cast by ineligible voters, Seppilu reported. The voter registration deadline is 30 days before an election for most state and municipal elections in Alaska. A number of Shaktoolik residents registered to vote in late September during a voter registration drive for the statewide election held Nov. 2.

The results of the Shaktoolik election were contested by a local voter because questioned ballots cast by persons who were not eligible to vote were counted in the election results, according to Auliye. She declined to identify the voter who contested the election.

An election for the Shaktoolik seat on the Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board of directors was held in conjunction with the municipal election under NSEDC's bylaws governing the election of board members. Auliye said the NSEDC race resulted in a 54-54 tie between incumbent Harvey Sookiayak and his only challenger, Eugene Asicksik, former president and chief executive officer of the corporation. The questioned re counted in the NSEDC election as well as the city election, she reported.

On Monday, Seppilu responded by email to several questions from the Nugget to clear up confusion about Shaktoolik's municipal election and NSEDC's board seat election. He said two seats on the Shaktoolik City Council were up for election on Oct. 5. Vying for Seat F were incumbent councilman Edgar Jackson, Sr., who garnered 43 votes, and Fred Sagoonick, who received 63 votes. Jackson currently serves as mayor of Shaktoolik. The mayor of a second class city such as Shaktoolik is elected by and from the council.

Seppilu said Myron Savetilik ran unopposed for Seat C and polled 73 votes. There were several write-in votes for Seat C, but 11 votes were the most cast for any individual, he added.

"I would like to state that I don't speak for NSDEC, and whatever they decide to do is their own [business]," Seppilu wrote. "I work with municipalities providing issues they are working on. If they have issues they want me to work on, I provide it and I make recommendations on how they technical assistance to whatever serves as mayor of Unalakleet, placed second with 76 votes. However, in the Oct. 12 runoff election, Johnson defeated Katchatag by a vote of 112 to 105.

A question about the status of the feasibility study came up during an NSEDC board meeting early this month in Nome. Ivanoff said Aggie

"NSEDC has not set a separate election date for the Member Representative for the Community of Shaktoolik for three reasons, (1) Initially it was not clear how long it would take for the City to have a new city election; (2) the City of Shaktoolik indicated that it would prefer to hold all elections together; and (3) even if NSEDC had immediately decided to hold a new election, due to the notice requirements, the new election could not have been held prior to our third quarter meetings."

- Dan Harrelson

should deal with the issues.

"I delved into the NSEDC election a little, at the city's request, and I recommended to them to contact NSEDC to seek advice on how they should deal with the election since it was a tie of 54 and 54 for both candidates for the NSEDC board election," Seppilu continued....

As for the city, I recommended to the city council to go ahead and certify the election results, since the candidates for Seat F had 43 votes for one candidate and 63 votes for the other," Seppilu said. "Even if the 12 questioned ballots are deducted from the winner's total votes in his favor, he still would win (63 votes -12 questioned ballots=51).

Special elections for NSEDC board seats are not subject to preclearance by the Department of Justice. Brevig Mission slated an election for its NSEDC board member on Oct. 5, even though the City holds it municipal elections on the first Tuesday in December. City Clerk Allen Okpealuk said the NSEDC board seat election set for Oct. 5 could not be held because the city ran out of toner and ballots could not be printed. In cooperation with NSEDC, the city council scheduled a special election on Nov. 16 for candidates Reggie Barr, Warren S. Rock and Walter Sectot. No results were available at press time.

On Monday, NSEDC President and Board Chairman Dan Harrelson responded by email to an inquiry from the Nugget asking whether NSEDC plans to hold its special election for a Shaktoolik board member at the same time as Shaktoolik's special municipal election.

election date for the Member Representative for the Community of Shaktoolik for three reasons," Harrelson replied: "(1) Initially it was not clear how long it would take for the City to have a new city election; (2) the City of Shaktoolik indicated that it would prefer to hold all elections together; and (3) even if NSEDC had immediately decided to hold a new election, due to the notice requirements, the new election could not have been held prior to our third quarter meetings." He said NSEDC has not ruled out the option to set a special election date separate from that of the City of Shaktoolik's special election.

A runoff election for NSEDC's Unalakleet board seat was held Oct. 12, just one week after the Oct. 5 election. In the first election, Frank Katchatag led three other candidates with 92 votes, but received only 38.8 percent of the total vote. NSEDC's election rules require that candidates receive at least 40 percent of the votes cast to be elected to the board. William (Middy) Johnson, who Fish plant for Shaktoolik?

Last August at a meeting in Nome, the NSEDC board directed staff to conduct a feasibility study of Harvey Sookiayak's proposal for a shore based fish processing plant or an at-sea processor at Shaktoolik. Some board members complained of inadequate tender service in the midst of a strong chum salmon run and a sizeable increase in Norton Sound commercial salmon fishing permits. Chief Executive Officer Janis Ivanoff said results of the study are to be presented to the company's board of directors at budget meetings late this year.

Voter registration drive

Gail Schubert, chief executive officer of Bering Straits Native Corp. responded by email on Monday to the Nugget's questions about a late September voter registration drive that BSNC organized in Shaktoolik and other communities throughout the region. The following questions and answers have been edited for clarity and to avoid repetition.

Nugget: Did Bering Straits Native Corp. arrange and pay for a voter registration drive in Shaktoolik to register voters for the statewide election held Nov. 2?

Schubert: Shaktoolik was one of 13 communities in the Bering Straits Region in which BSNC employed individuals on a very short-term basis to assist in non-partisan voter registration efforts. These villages included Shishmaref, Wales, Teller, Brevig Mission, White Mountain, Nome, Golovin, Koyuk, Shaktoolik, Unalakleet, St. Michael, Stebbins and Gambell. These voter registration efforts were strictly nonpartisan-this was one of the first things explained to the village conducting employees registration.

Nugget: How many voters were registered during the drive and when was it completed in Shaktoolik?

Schubert: Approximately 250 new voters were registered in the Bering Straits Region. The exact number registered in Shaktoolik can't be ascertained because the registration forms were destroyed after the form was faxed to the Division of Elections. The voter registration efforts in Shaktoolik and the other communities were completed at least one month prior to the date of the general election-I believe registration efforts began on the 28th of September.

Nugget: Did BSNC undertake voter registration drives in Bering Strait communities as a member of Alaska Standing Together (AST), the independent expenditure committee formed under the rules of the Federal Election Commission?

Schubert: BSNC elected to conduct its own voter registration efforts using the model (and in some cases the same individuals) that Kawerak has utilized in past nonpartisan voter registration drives. There was communication with AST's other voter registrants, but BSNC's effort was independent.

School salmon project starts swimmir

By Nikki Scherer

Nome Elementary has a new "school" of fish.

The salmon project is back at the Nome Elementary this year. Under the program students will be able to observe the salmon life cycle in an incubation tank set up at the school. Teachers Matt Slingsby and Nikki

Scherer attended a training earlier this year with the Cooperative Extension Service and 4-H in Fairbanks. The program teaches educators how to set up the incubation tank, the ins and outs of keeping the salmon at a safe temperature, and keeping the environment sterile and clean. Over the past five years, five teachers at the Nome Elementary have been trained in the project.

With the local guidance of Charlie Lean, fisheries biologist for Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., the primary students will be using the salmon tank project for learning about lifecycles, ecosystems and habitat. With salmon being such an important resource in our community, the project is an ideal way to connect science to the real world. The tank allows children to see changes in the salmon that would normally take place under the ice. The teachers encourage parents and members of the community to come and see the salmon tank and the lifecycle stages.

Lean brought fertilized salmon eggs and alevin for observation Nov.

8. With hopes that the project maintains momentum and strength, the new eggs should hatch around the beginning of December. Provided they stay healthy, the students will be able to help Lean release the eggs to the place they were born in the spring, really bringing the salmon project from the school back to the community.

School board

noting that with Veterans' Day being observed that week it was an opportune time to do so. The pledge will now be recited each Monday at the high school. Nome Elementary School Principal Dave Keller said it is his school's policy that teachers individually lead their students in reciting the pledge. He said some teachers may have not kept up with the directive and will again remind staff of the policy.

The school district's policy also notes that federal courts have held individuals may not be compelled to salute the flag or even stand during the salute. The policy states that the district respects the legal right of individuals who wish to not participate. However, those individuals are to maintain a respectful silence during the salute.

Lyon also asked that the schools label their programs presented during the holidays as Christmas programs. The current board policy doesn't speak directly to whether a program can or cannot be called a Christmas program but does say that "school-sponsored programs should not be, nor have the effect of being, religiously oriented or a religious celebration." It notes that holidays often raise concerns over religion in the schools and says, "classroom decorations and costumes during holidays may express seasonal themes which are not religious in nature."

Keller had initially told staff at the elementary that the school would be calling this year's presentation a Christmas program, but then changed course and title after further review of district policy. Keller said the winter musical program at the school will now be called a holiday program.

Principals' reports

Elementary Principal Keller said the new traffic pattern being used to access on completely with parents who drop off their students in the morning. The pattern that was newly implemented this school year has vehicles enter the school parking lot from Fifth Avenue to drop off students along the sidewalk in front of the building. Cars then exit the parking lot onto Sixth Avenue. He said some parents are dropping off children along Fifth Avenue, which presents a hazard. "Having kids dropped off on Fifth Avenue is unsafe and competes with bus traffic," he said.

Keller also noted that he has been conducting 20-minute classroom visitations and following up with meetings with the teachers to give them feedback. He also reported that the student handbook committee has been meeting with a particular eye toward addressing the school's attendance policies. He said he favored an approach that stressed the importance of attendance to parents, grandparents and guardians over one that was more focused on penalties for truancy.

Keller reported that the recent parent-teacher conferences held at the school had an approximate turnout of 85 percent, although he had hoped that more children would have attended with their parents. Keller also told the board that the school would be starting a reading incentive program to encourage reading at home. Through the four-week program students will earn points that in turn can be redeemed for rewards.

Nome-Beltz Principal Gast reported on the Junior Carnival and haunted house that he said came together with significant work by teachers Randi Taylor-Habib, Josh Vaughn, Dan Sullivan, Caleb Weaver and Susanne Thomas. He said the carnival, held Oct. 30, raised thousands of dollars that the junior class will use to put on this school year's prom.

Gast said work continues on a credit recovery program for students who have fallen behind their classmates in earning credits toward graduation. He said focus is being placed on encouraging attendance at the school.

Legislative priorities

Superintendent Jon Wehde in his report to the board noted the district had about a week and a half to present its legislative priorities to the city. The announcement caught board members off guard since in the past they have met to go over the list before it is forwarded to the city. The board ultimately scheduled an additional November work session for Nov. 16 to discuss the priorities. The meeting was to be held just after the Nugget went to press. Wehde said the priorities generally are split evenly regarding capital improvements and items that regard classroom instruction.

Wehde also reported that staff evaluations are progressing on schedule and said he believes the district will see increased retention. "Overall reports are encouraging," he said. "I don't think we'll have the kind of turnover we've had over the past two Nome-Beltz sa rate last year of nearly 50 percent.

Same meeting, different time?

Board members debated the possibility of changing their meeting time from 5:30 p.m. to later in the evening. Board member Marie Tozier said she wanted to find ways to get more community members to board and schoolrelated meetings. "As a board we need to discuss or find ways to pull in more parents into some of these, especially these planning meetings and im-provement plan meetings," she said. "When you come up with a plan of how a school district is going to improve itself, we can do a lot more as a board to draw parents in."

It was noted that the 5:30 p.m. meetings fall at a time when many families are feeding their children. Board member Barb Nickels said the issue has been discussed several times in the past and the board always ended up keeping the 5:30 p.m. time slot. "We did it twice last year," Nickels said. "And we'll do it again," Board President Karmun responded.

The board also addressed the desire to hear more from the delegation of teachers and administrators who travelled to Kennewick, Wash., to see how schools there remarkably improved elementary school students' reading scores over a number of years. While some on the board wanted the teachers to continually report back to the board, others argued that it was the board's duty to help implement a plan to carry out changes suggested by the teachers. "I feel like the plan from Kennewick needs to come from the board," board member Brennan said. "They are the teachers, and their heart is in it, but I think they need support, too.'

Board member Barb Amarok covered several concerns and topics during the board's comment period. She reiterated her request that juniors and seniors be given a test administered through the University of Alaska system that is designed to show whether students would need to take remedial courses to be ready for 100-level classes in college.

Amarok also wanted to see more reporting on how the district is progressing in implementing its strategic plan that was developed last year. "There are actions that should have been accomplished by now or at least worked on this fall," she said, reading off a list of items such as exploring collaboration with community organizations. "I really would like to see at least once a month updates from key personnel about accomplishments and work on the strategic plan being done," she said.

Amarok also again announced her desire to have the board investigate the job descriptions of each administrator working for the district. "As far as I can see we have eight administrators in our district. ... I think it's important to assure that everyone is working toward the success of students in our schools," she said.

Karmun asked the rest of the board members if they would like to add such a discussion as an agenda item. The remainder of the board did not appear to have a formal debate on the matter at this time. Nickels said she felt such an examination was the job of the superintendent.

When should men have their PSA levels checked?

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Prostate cancer is the second leading cause of cancer-related deaths in men in the United States, second only to lung cancer. According to the American Cancer Society, one in every six men will be diagnosed with prostate cancer at some point during his lifetime.

Since the 1990s, a screening test has been available to catch early cases of prostate cancer. But the test itself has become a source of confusion and controversy.

The test measures levels of prostate specific antigen (PSA) in the blood stream. PSA is a protein produced by both normal and cancerous cells in the prostate. Rapidly growing cancer cells produce a higher level of PSA than do normal cells.

A low level of PSA is always present in the bloodstream. Most doctors consider a level above 4 ng/mL to be abnormally elevated; however, a growing number of urologists and cancer specialists have suggested a level above 2.5

ng/mL could be abnormal.
A higher level of PSA in the bloodstream may indicate the presence of cancer in the prostate. I emphasize the word "may" because there are many things rise, including infections of the prostate or bladder, enlargement of the prostate called benign prostatic hypertrophy, and direct pressure on the prostate from riding a bicycle or thin-seated snowmachine.

The only way to know if a man with an elevated PSA has cancer is to perform a biopsy of the prostate, a walnut-sized gland that surrounds the urinary tract at the base of a man's bladder. This is a delicate procedure performed by urologists. Studies of biopsy results show that men with prostate cancer will have a higher PSA compared with men without prostate cancer only 67 percent of the time. This means the PSA is 67 percent accurate at predicting whether a man has prostate cancer or not. While this is a little better than the 50 percent predictability of flipping a coin it is far from perfect.

Some experts, including the American College of Preventive Medicine question whether the PSA should be used as a screening test at all. Though this may sound absurd, the ACPM recognizes that most men with prostate cancer will not die from their prostate cancer. In fact, autopsy research shows that if men live long enough most of them will eventually develop some degree of prostate cancer, though the cancer will remain confined to the prostate. Most men with prostate cancer will die from some other cause.

One large trial showed that 1,410 men would have to be screened and 48 additional cancers would have to be detected to prevent one death from prostate cancer. In essence this means 47 men must be over-treated to prevent one death.

No one would argue with the value of a life saved. But PSA screening leads to an increased number of procedures including biopsies and prostate surgeries that have risks that threaten a man's quality of life. The most feared risks associated with prostate procedures are impotence and incontinence.

Researchers are working on ways to improve the PSA test to more effectively identify aggressive prostate cancers, and thereby save lives, without subjecting the mass of men to testing that may be falsely reassuring or unnecessarily worrisome.

For now, when it comes to prostate cancer screening, the PSA test is the best medicine has to offer. Professional organizations vary widely in their recommendations for PSA screening. The final decision is best left to each patient and his provider after a discussion of risks and benefits of the test.

In general, the following recommendations from various groups provide some

The National Comprehensive Cancer Center Guidelines on the Early Detection of Prostate Cancer recommend an initial PSA test at age 40 to determine a baseline level. Any PSA result over 2.5 ng/mL should be evaluated further for risk of prostate cancer. PSA screening at regular intervals may be used to detect an upward trend in the PSA level, called PSA velocity.

The American Urological Association recommends offering PSA screening beginning at age 50 in men with at least a 10-year life expectancy. African-American men and those with a first-degree relative with prostate cancer should consider screening at an earlier age.

A recent study published in the British Medical Journal suggested that men with a single PSA level of less than 1 ng/mL at age 60 do not require further screening because the lifetime risk of developing prostate cancer was only 0.2% for this group.

The American College of Preventive Medicine recommends discontinuing PSA screening in the asymptomatic male after age 75.

The American Academy of Family Physicians recommends that patients speak with a trusted provider about symptoms of prostate disease, like urinary urgency, frequency, or erectile dysfunction and whether or not PSA screening is indicated as a part of an overall health assessment.

Health fair again packs Rec Center

Whether they were in search of low-cost blood tests or a chance to see how the latest fitness phenomena, zumba, is done, Nomeites were certain to find a variety of booths and information at Norton Sound Health Corp.'s annual health fair.

With the theme "Harvesting History," in honor of the health corporation's 40th anniversary this year, the two-day affair was held at the Nome Recreation Center Nov. 12-13.

Organized by NSHC's CAMP

Department, the event features screenings and information from many of the hospital's departments and several community organizations. By visiting each of the booths, particpants were able to take home either fresh produce or a pumpkin.

In addition to the booths, live demonstrations were given on making agutuk, or Eskimo ice cream, by Berda Willson, and the zumba fitness dance by Liz Murphy.

Anchorage resident Thomas "Tom" Anthony Busch, 63, died unexpectedly November 1, 2010 at his

Tom, an only child, was born November 1, 1947 in Philadelphia to Benjamin and Catherine Busch. He grew up in the Philadelphia area, where he graduated from high school. He went on to Boston College, where he received a bachelor's degree in psychology with a minor in engineering and, later, an honorary Doctorate of Humane Letters.

Thomas Anthony Busch

Tom married the love of his life, Florence Francis, on September 3, 1977. Together, they had two beautiful children: Stephen and Kathleen.

With a first-class radiotelephone license, Tom arrived in Nome on February 8, 1970 initially, to serve as a Jesuit volunteer for a three-year stint. He designed and supervised the construction and wiring of KNOM's first AM transmitter and broadcast studios. After a brief stint in Fairbanks, he returned to KNOM in 1975 as its general manager, a position he held for over 30 years. He guided the station, welcoming and mentoring young Jesuit volunteers, many of whom he considered family. During his tenure, KNOM won Marconi and Crystal awards from the National Association of Broadcasters and multiple Gabriel awards for Radio Station of the Year from the Catholic Academy for Communication Arts Professionals, as well as honors from the Associated Press, Scripps-Howard, and numerous others. In the last five years, Tom worked as KNOM's fundraiser and engineer. In the words of KNOM's current general manager, Ric Schmidt, "There would be no KNOM Radio without Tom."

Tom served on the Alaska Broadcasters Association Board of Directors for 18 years and twice served as its president. Having organized Alaska's annual convention for many years, he was honored as their first "Broadcaster of the Year" in 1986 and was inducted into their Alaska Broadcasters Hall of Fame in 1997. That same year, Tom was presented with the Agnellus Andrew Award, becoming the only North American broadcaster ever to be so honored.

For eight years, Tom was secretary for Nome's Rotary Club, and he served as its president from 1992 to 1993. After moving to Anchorage, he continued his passionate involvement with the Anchorage International Rotary Club and was currently serving as its District Secretary. Tom also served as president for Kegoyah Kozga Library and for Nome Preschool, Inc., as well as other organizations in Nome.

Since 1970, Tom had been an amateur radio operator. He held the highest class - Extra - and volunteered as a license examiner.

Tom loved to talk, to tell stories, and to take pictures; he loved puns, researching information, and learning, and he was an inspiring author. He was patient, generous, and enriched all of our lives. Tom meant so much to so many, whether as a friendly voice on the radio, as a dedicated coworker and mentor, or as a devoted friend, uncle, father and husband. We will miss him greatly.

Tom is survived by his wife of 33 years, Florence; son Stephen; daughter Kathleen and her husband Jonathan Dumais; cousin Mary Belz and her children Aaron and Kristen; cousin Ginny, her husband Al Rojas, and their children Allison and Chris; sister-in-law Elsie, her husband Tim Boudreau, and their children Mattheu, Jonathan, and Shanelle; sister-in-law Margo Francis; brotherin-law Rudy Francis; and nephew Benjamin Hunter Francis.

Tom was preceded in death by his parents Benjamin and Catherine, by his mother- and father-in-law Theresa and Edgar Francis, and by his brothers-in-law George Francis and Benjamin Francis.

In lieu of flowers, the Busch family has asked that donations be made to KNOM Radio at P.O. Box 988, Nome, Alaska, 99762.

Report says Governor should get a raise

The Alaska State Officers compensation commission suggested in a report that the Alaska governor get a pay raise from $125,000 to $175,000 per year. The commission also suggested a bigger paycheck for the lieutenant governor from $100,000 to $135,000. The commission also proposed to adopt a mechanism that will periodically adjust these salaries and the salaries of executive department heads for cost-of-living increases. In comparison, the head of the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation is paid $320,760 and the head of the Alaska Railroad Corporation is paid $280,000. Public hearings regarding those recommendations are scheduled to be held on December 7 and January 7, 2011 at 1:00 p.m. at the Anchorage Legislative Information Office.

Bowhead whale tracking project wins accolades

A project called "Satellite Tracking of Western Arctic Bowhead Whales" was recently a recipient of an award for the unprecedented international collaboration among government and Native organizations to combine traditional hunting knowledge and practices with state of the art technology for advancing science. The project resulted in new insights regarding the movements and habitat use of the endangered bowhead whale and advanced marine mammal science.

The award was signed by Secretary Ken Salazar and presented by the U.S. Department of the Interior to all participants, which are the Alaska Eskimo Whaling Commission, North Slope Borough, Alaska Department of Fish and Game, Canadian Department of Fisheries and Oceans, Greenland Institute of Natural Resources, the Aklavik Hunters and Trappers Committee and the Tuktoyaktuk Hunters and Trappers Committee, both of the Northwest Territories in Canada.

Saying it Sincerely

By Pastor Everett Arnold, Our Savior Lutheran Church for the Nome Ministerial Association

Everything is going wrong. And we no longer live in the world we knew.

The Book of the Prophet Malachi describes times like these. Things go badly for God's people. So they ask, "What shall we do?" Actually they argue with God about "What shall we do?" [Mal. 3:13-4:3] They say to God,

'Look, violent, arrogant, mean, powerful people are hurting us.' They say, 'Look Lord, it's the cheats and the scam artists and others with money and power! They are the happy ones, not us!' [3:13] They complain, 'We get nothing out of it, and we lose everything!' 'But you do nothing about it, Lord!'

And they complain, 'It's just a useless idea, the notion of serving God!' Then God's Word answers through the prophet Malachi. God says, 'I will never forget those who respect, love, trust and serve me.' And God answers, 'I will always treasure them. And I will spare them when I come to deal with the arrogant evil-doers.' [3:17-4:3] And God answers, 'In the final situation, you around and fornicate. [1. Thes. 4:3] So then Christians are asking, 'What shall we do about these other Christians?'

But then the Lord Jesus Christ Himself speaks through his apostles whom he sends. And here's how Christ answers: Avoid the bad company of unruly people who do not listen to the apostles of Christ. Count on Christ to strengthen and protect you. Draw strength from Christ, and use your strength

[I. Thess. 4:9-12] God's people suffer and ask 'What shall we do?' God answers 'trust me to turn your suffering into healing and your sadness into joy.' So we might lift our sights up above all that is going wrong for us. And we would see the Sun of Righteousness shining health and joy upon us.

to serve Him. Live quietly; mind your own business; and do helpful work.

There's a new story from Baghdad. And it's a tragic story. Iraqi Christians were at worship in their church, called Our Lady of Salvation. A terrorist group from Al Qaeda attacked the congregation for being Christians in a Moslem nation; 58 members were killed; 75 more were injured. The survivors asked, 'What shall we do?'

And they returned to their church the next Sunday. They did this because of what they believe. They believe that they are still in relationship with God whether they are living or dying. They set their sights above what was happening to them. And they saw God still blessing.

while, the Diocese of Fairbanks continued to wean KNOM of subsidies. This was not in any way an adversarial position, simply facing the facts of dwindling diocesan revenues amid rising costs of operation.

Tom Busch, as KNOM's general manager, had the foresight to craft what would eventually become the station's mainstay of funding for the next two decades: a direct mail appeal. This coincided with a capital campaign to replace KNOM's crumbling facilities, which cost too much to maintain. Tom succeeded, and to his credit, KNOM received the last payment of subsidy from the Diocese of Fairbanks 15 years ago, about two percent of the operating budget, and managed to keep KNOM afloat.

KNOM has and will continue to depend on the generosity of donors to keep the radio station on the air. With their support we will continue to broadcast for years to come. Ric Schmidt

Dear Editor,

Looks like those happy summer days of fishing, berry picking and sunshine are retreating under the blanket of cold that is enveloping our region, tucking us in for a long chilly

Winter in Alaska can be an isolating time for people, especially here in our region where we become literally isolated by our geography and climate. Isolation can do funny things to people, and unfortunately it often goes hand-in-hand with a spike in substance abuse, domestic violence, depression and even suicide.

When I think of the long days of darkness ahead and I start to feel my spirits sinking, I like to remind myself that people have been weathering out the winters for hundreds of vears on the Seward Peninsula. What was their trick? I do believe it was keeping busy. With all the bountiful harvest of berries, fish and meat put up for the winter, it was time to get busy with indoor projects. Traditionally that may have meant sewing a new parky or pair of mukluks, carving ivory, tools and frames for skin boats, and many other projects that kept the day-to-day living and subsistence endeavors alive.

Winter was a time to make good food, good music, tell stories and enjoy the company of family. Many here in our region still use winter as a time to do these things, but many winter presents, many find themselves bored, restless and cramped inside. They solve this problem by heading downtown to drown these miserable feelings in alcohol. I can't think of a more isolating substance than alcohol; an altered state of consciousness, and the decisions and actions that go with it, have the potential to alienate us from our neighbors, friends and families. When we finally sober up and come back to reality, we have to face our decisions, the people we hurt, and the fact that all our money is gone. Talk about depressing.

Unfortunately, with the down time

This winter I would encourage all of us to find a constructive outlet, and do something productive that brings joy to our body and spirit. Luckily for us, Nome is replete with fun activities to do in the winter if vou know where to look. If you need a physical outlet, head down to the Rec and snag a workout and sauna.

Join a city-league team for camaraderie and competition, or venture out to Nome Beltz and cheer on our local youth as they compete. If you want to challenge your brain, consider taking a class at NWC. Not only are there a variety of challenging and useful academic classes offered there, you can also learn some traditional art forms like skin sewing, beading or carving. You can tinker in plywood sculpture, pottery, or printmaking or learn how to fix your snowmachine yourself. Taking a class is a great way to meet and mingle with people from outside your usual social circle.

The Nome Arts Council keeps things hoppin' all winter long with live music at open mike nights, and keep your ear to the ground for cultural celebrations that feature some of the amazing, talented drummers and dancers from the region. These are just a few of the fun things happening in Nome. So listen to the radio, check out the paper, and the bulletin boards around town for more

Most importantly, use this down time to spend some quality time with your loved ones. If you know of someone who lives alone and has no family here, reach out to them and make them feel included. We are a community; let's put the focus on togetherness and shut out isolation this winter.

Tara Connolly Prosser Nome, AK

Dear Nancy,

I'd like to take this opportunity to brighten your day with news of yet another example of a young person, born and raised in Nome, coming back to the community and giving back in an unselfish way. Darcee Perkins, daughter of Wes and Terrie Perkins, is among a growing number of Nome-Beltz alumni giving back to their High School and (community). She volunteered to assist Coach Rob Luce with the Lady Nanook Varsity Volleyball team this year. She has done so with no compensation, often taking time off from her work to aid in the girls' skill development.

As parents, we are very appreciative of her commitment to our daughters. As a teacher it warms my heart to see her genuine compassion for the girls and the sharing of her skills, and as long-time community members we are happy to see her support our young ladies by being an outstanding role model.

Thank you, Darcee "Dorito." Fred and Mari Lammer Nome, AK

Dear Editor,

I was disappointed by the limited amount of coverage the Lady Nanook Varsity Volleyball Team received in last week's paper. The Lady Nanooks were in Dillingham for the regional tournament, and I felt they deserved an article that described their achievements and successes at this event.

The Lady Nanooks took 4th at the tournament. They defeated Bethel and Unalaska and went on to play Kotzebue and Barrow, two of the four stronger teams in the region. Dillingham won regions on their home turf with Barrow taking 2nd and both teams advancing on to the state tournament. The weekend was filled with three days of high intensity volleyball displaying some exceptionally talented athletes from all over our region. Two members of the team, Renee Lammer and Taylor Pomeranz, received all-tournament awards for Nome.

I was given the opportunity to work with the Lady Nanooks this year. They made leaping improvements as a team and they should be recognized for their hard work and dedication. It is important to keep our community tuned into all school activities, equally.

Sports programs benefit from community support and the newspaper is a great way to keep fans updated and recognize students for their successes. I would like to see a greater effort towards school activity coverage, especially for big events like regional tournaments.

Thanks for your time. Darcee Perkins Nome

Election Results

It has been quite the interesting election this year. I was glad to see a good voter turnout in our district, and I continue to urge all those eligible to vote to register and exercise your civic right and duty. As indicated by the Division of Elections, approximately 205,321 out of 494,876 or 41 percent of registered voters statewide cast ballots. In our district alone, we had a 43 percent voter turnout with approximately 7,465 out of the 17,379 registered voters participating.

I want to thank the voters in our district for having a strong turnout. Having a strong turnout reminds the state that rural Alaska plays a vital role when it's a close election, such as this year's U.S. Senate seat. Lisa Murkowski, being the projected winner for the U.S. Senate seat, got substantial support from rural Alaskans who are predominantly Democratic. According to the Anchorage Daily News, rural voting districts gave the Republican incumbent as much as 60 percent of the assumed 13,400-vote lead over Joe Miller. People across the state are eagerly awaiting the final results.

This election saw widespread use of a 'write-in' option. I'd like to acknowledge Senator Lisa Murkowski for making history by successfully campaigning as a 'write-in' candidate. She likely joins Senator Strom Thurmond, who was the only successful 'write-in' candidate to win an election in 1954. Thurmond was the U.S. Senator for South Carolina.

Furthermore, I'd like to recognize Representative Woodie Salmon for his six years of service and dedication serving Interior Alaska. Representative Salmon represented 90 rural communities and 12 school districts. He worked diligently to bring the unique issues of rural Alaska to the forefront of the legislature and specifically fought for and helped increase funding for education and public safety as well as transportation infrastructure projects. Representative Salmon was instrumental in securing Capital Budget project monies for rural communities. He understood the importance of stimulating rural economic development and providing jobs to the villages. We will miss him in the legislature and wish him the best in future successes.

Additionally, I'd also to like to recognize Representatives Bob Buch, Harry Crawford and Mike Kelly and Senator Con Bunde for their years of service in the legislature. Senator Bunde is resigning after 18 years of serving in the legislature as both a representative and then a senator. It has been a real pleasure working with so many dedicated public servants.

Both Representative Foster and Representative Joule will be returning to the legislature from House District 39 and 40. I anticipate a productive legislative session ahead and welcome the new legislators who will be joining us as we continue to serve our great state. I look forward to working with all legislators, those that are returning and those that are new, as we keep working for a better Alaska. Ballot Measure #1 to "Increase Number of Legislators and Districts," a measure that many legislators and I championed, unfortunately did not pass this election. Since Ballot Measure 1 failed, it is projected that Southeast and the Bush will lose some representation (a seat in Southeast, half a seat in the Bush). Anchorage, Fairbanks and Kenai will stay the same, and the Mat-Su Valley is expected to gain that seat and a half. If it had passed, it is estimated that Southeast would have only lost half a seat and the Bush would have lost a one third of a seat. Anchorage would have gained two seats, the Mat-Su would have gained two, and Fairbanks would have gained half a seat. Ballot Measure 1 would have not only benefited rural Alaska; Anchorage and Fairbanks would have gained

Although the Republican-Democrat senate split continues to be a 10-10 divide, there will be some changes in the Alaska Senate Bipartisan Majority and with the Senate Standing Committees. Our new Majority Leader is Senator Kevin Meyer who will be replacing Senator Johnny Ellis. Senator Ellis did an outstanding job as the Majority Leader and despite the changeover, I am confident Senator Ellis will continue to be an effective leader in the senate. I'd like to laud Senator Meyer in his new position and I am certain he will make a fine Majority Leader. Republican Senator Gary Stevens, who has proven valuable, will remain the Senate President. Regarding standing committees, I will no longer be serving in the Legislative Budget and Audit, Regulation Review, and Transportation committees, but will continue serving on the Finance, Community and Regional Affairs, and Legislative Council committees. I also have a seat on the Resources Committee. I look forward to serving on these committees and working for the best interests of my constituents and all Alaskans. The Legislative session will begin January 18, 2011.

Native American Heritage Month

This month is Native American/Alaska Native Heritage Month. It is a time to remember the rich contributions that Native Americans, including Native Alaskans have made to society. Native Americans have many rich cultures and traditions. Historically speaking, Native Americans have accepted people from other cultures and assisted many people who otherwise would have perished with no aid. These are beautiful qualities of humanity.

It is also true that our Native people have struggled with discrimination, poverty, and inequality, much of which continues today. Like those before us, we must continue to rise above these social injustices with courage and determination. Some of those values include traditional subsistence lifestyles, responsible environmental stewardship, continuing our Native languages, carrying on Native arts and crafts, and Native dancing, to name a few. During Native American/Alaska Native Heritage Month, let's celebrate the richness of our cultures by continuing to practice these traditional ways and reinforce the self-respect and dignity we value in our cultures.

As your senator, I will continue do work on my part towards improving the quality of life in areas where it is needed. However, I cannot do it without the help of my constituents. I ask that each of us in our communities seek ways to improve the conditions for the communities as a whole. I encourage you to hold onto invaluable customs and work toward stimulating sustainable rural economies, improving health care, developing more quality education, reducing mortality rates, and ultimately propelling our communities towards self-governance. I call upon all Alaskans to commemorate this month with appropriate programs and activities, and to celebrate November 26, 2010, as Native American/Alaska Native Heritage Day.

Scammon Bay Couple Parents of the Year

I'd like to praise Billy and Alice Rivers of Scammon Bay for their service in foster care. They have been named Parents of the Year by the Alaska Federation of Natives. Since they have opened their home to foster children, they have taken in 24 foster children so far. Regrettably, the unfortunate loss of their 14-year old son, Adam, who took his own life 10 years ago, is the catalyst for this change. When this happened, Billy and Alice made a promise to take in wayward children. They have eight children of their own who have all grown up and moved out. Since then, the Yup'ik parents turned to foster care and have adopted six children.

During AFN, Billy and Alice had four foster children with them. The parents say they feel like they are making a difference, and they are. "I like it. It's tough work, but they're good," Alice said of the foster children. The Rivers shared their story at the Carlson Center in Fairbanks upon accepting their award. Three young girls from Hooper Bay, aged 4 to 7, clung to their legs and rolled on the floor. William Lamont, age 15 of Emmonak, stood with them and stated they were great parents. "He was supposed to be with us for three weeks and three weeks turned into five months," Alice said of William. Alice wore a white T-shirt decorated with colorful handprints. "Best mom, hands down," it said. AFN commends the parents. "This family has been a tremendous help to the people of Scammon Bay and the surrounding villages by fostering a variety of children and young adults from families in need," AFN said of the Rivers. They have encouraged and supported their children by "showing and teaching them Yup'ik cultural values, ideals, way of life and subsistence hunting/gathering methods," AFN continued.

The Scammon Bay parents have had much applause. Myron Naneng, president of the Association of Village Council Presidents, told the AFN audience that the Rivers are his in-laws. Naneng applauded their parenting. Andrew Guy, Calista Corp.'s new CEO, gave the Rivers a $1,000 check from the Native regional corporation. "They show that they are examples to all of us as parents to follow," he said. "They have a lot of love." Alyeska Pipeline Services Company also gave a $1,000 check.

"In our Native community, there's no greater role you can play than being a parent," said Matt Carle, stakeholder relations manager with Alyeska. The Rivers have about 40 grandchildren and four great-grandchildren. They'll continue taking in kids as long as they can, Alice said. Congratulations to the Billy and Alice for their immeasurable service and support.

Cough medicine abuse at school spurs concern

Massive doses of syrup, pills can pose several health risks

By Tyler Rhodes

For those who use it for its intended purpose, it's just called cough syrup.

Those who have a more deviant purpose in mind may call it anything from "robo," "skittles" or "dex."

The Nome Police Department is simply calling it a problem. "This is the new rage in Nome for adolescent drug abuse," said Nome Police Chief John Papasodora.

Papasodora is sounding the warning on the use of cough and cold medicine by Nome's youth after two 11-year-olds were caught at Nome Elementary School with the substances with the intent of getting high. "Last week I discovered that some of our upper-grade students

Alarm tops schools' wish list for funding

By Tyler Rhodes

The Nome Board of Education has placed the installation of a fire alarm and sprinkler system in the building that houses the district offices and the Anvil City Science Academy charter school at the top of its wish list that will be sent out to legislators this year.

The $90,000 project tops a list of four facility improvements that the district would like the state to fund. Second on the list is a replacement of the elementary school's gym floor at an estimated cost of $100,000 to $160,000. Upgrading the lighting throughout the district with more energy-efficient systems ranked third at a cost of $100,000. The final item on the list is the sec-

NJUS deals with peddling fuel and handling wind

NJUS could have up to a million gallons for sale

By Nancy McGuire

Finances, power plant, production, fuel prices and wind were on the table at last week's Nome Joint Utility Board meeting.

The electrical production report for the end of October shows 2,972,798 KWH of power produced by one Wartsila generator and the Banner Wind Farm. Six other generators were not on line (one Black Start, two Electro-Motive, two Caterpillars and another Wartsila) pillars and another Wartsila).

Nome Joint Utility System is not comfortable with the feedback of power from the Banner Wind Farm if NJUS's two big Wartsila generators are running. They propose putting a smaller generator in an available bay at the new power plant. The thought is that one of their Caterpillar generators would work better with the Banner Wind Farm and NJUS's own proposed wind farm at Newton Peak.

NJUS looks to having a smart grid system in the future that could be adjusted to better fit peak load usage, timing and variable rates.

At NJUS's request, the City of Nome directed staff to pursue the requisite ordinance amendments with the city attorney to establish a fuel utility. NJUS has begun collecting data and contacting insurance brokers. NJUS is also looking into the availability of tanker truck equipment to lease or purchase and to see if there are interested parties who would provide delivery service.

NJUS may have up to a million gallons of fuel that could be available for sale this winter. The product NJUS received this year is the equivalent of No. 1 (stove oil), so it would not be a problem to use it as heating fuel, reported NJUS manager John Handeland. He said there is much to be done to get the program underway, but NJUS will continue to collect the requisite information for the utility board and Nome Common Council.

Nome Common Council.

There was discussion about NJUS's proposed entry into the fuel distribution business being in competition with private enterprise. Board member Carl Emmons said, "If they (private fuel delivery companies) would open up their books (to scrutiny), we would not have to go into this business." The board felt NJUS would have no unfair advantage. "When private enterprise is having a field day at our expense, I have no problem with this," said board member Fred Moody.

Emmons said that NJUS should consider getting its own fuel truck to supply its own construction equipment and projects.

Editorial

Thankful

Alaskans should be ever so thankful that Joe Miller was not elected to the Senate. That would have been downright scary. Lisa Murkowski waged a good write-in campaign. Since the national Republican Party did not exactly beat the drums for her, maybe she'll consider changing parties. Alaskans had a new face emerge in state politics. Scott McAdams should stick around for state government. He presented his ideas well and made a favorable impression on rural Alaskans.

On the federal level, the outgoing Congress accomplished a lot that helps the ordinary citizen. We now have health care reform that will cover millions of Americans. It's made the insurance market more competitive and prevents insurance companies from rejecting folks with pre-existing conditions. It's an important step and should not be killed by politicians who think that early death is an answer to the health care problem. We also got a start on reform in the financial services that should prevent crises that required massive federal bailouts. The federal stimulus package, although not enough, seems to be working well. Nome is getting a new hospital built through this program. Congress has dealt with many issues such as expanding Medicaid, unemployment benefits, children's health insurance, tobacco regulations and many other actions. Thankfully this past Congress got a lot of legislation passed.

Sure, some legislation needs further refinements, and hopefully the new Congress will work collaboratively. We hope that deconstructionists do not prevail and legislators go about their job of legislating. If they can't, they will find that job security is not something they will find when it is time for reelection. -N.L.M.-

News from around the state of Alaska

Compiled by Diana Haecker F-22 pilot killed in crash

The pilot of an F-22 Raptor fighter jet has died in the single airplane crash near Cantwell. Air Force officials said that search and rescue teams have found conclusive evidence that the pilot did not survive the crash. The pilot was identified as Air Force Capt. Jeffrey Haney, of Clarklake, Michigan. Air Force Col. Jack McMullen, 3rd Wing commander said that evidence showed that Captain Haney did not eject from the aircraft prior to impact. A recovery team at the crash site found a part of the ejection seat, along with several life support items that Captain Haney wore during the flight.

The Raptor crashed on Tuesday, Nov. 16, after it lost contact with air traffic control Tuesday evening. The F-22 was on a nighttime training mission. Search and rescue aircraft from the Alaska Air National Guard's 11th Rescue Coordination Center discovered the wreckage of the aircraft on Wednesday in a remote, rugged area approximately 200 miles north of Anchorage near Denali National Park. Recovery operations are still underway and are expected to last several weeks. An Air Force safety investigation board is investigating to determine the cause of the crash.

Miller campaign wants to halt election certification

The Division of Elections has finished the task to separate and tally more than 100,000 write-in votes and to hold a hand-count of five percent of ballots in each district. Director of the division Gail Fenumiai said that Alaskans can feel confident that their votes were accurately counted and reported by the Division of Elections. However, GOP candidate Joe Miller mistrusts the division's efforts and asked a federal judge on Thursday for a preliminary injunction stopping officials from certifying the election. The injunction is connected to Miller's previous lawsuit challenging the legality of write-in ballots for Lisa Murkowski. Miller maintains that misspellings would render a vote invalid. The Division of Elections interpreted that voter intent would trump misspellings in accepting the ballots. Murkowski claimed the race on Wednesday after leading with approximately 10,400 votes. Miller had challenged 8,153 of the ballots counted for Murkowski, but he would still be behind even if he won every challenge. According to an AP report, Miller said he intends to request a re-count.

Parnell reorganizes cabinet

Governor Sean Parnell last week reshuffled the constellation of commissioners in his administration. Parnell re-appointed former Nomeite Susan Bell to be commissioner of the Dept. of Commerce, Community and Economic Development. Parnell repositioned current Attorney General Dan Sullivan to become the new commissioner for the Dept. of Natural Resources.

Sullivan aggressively fought environmental and related federal findings that stood in the way of the state's economic and resource development interests from timber to mining to Outer Continental Shelf oil and gas development. The new Transportation and Public Facilities commissioner is Marc Luiken, and Becky Hultberg is the new Administration commissioner. Environmental Conservation Commissioner Larry Hartig stays on the job. With the resignation of Denby Lloyd, Parnell named Cora Campbell as acting commissioner of the Department of Fish and Game.

Bills introduced to alter Native 8(a) contracts

Both chambers of the United States Congress have bills before them that aim to strip Native Corporations of advantages from the Small Business Administration's 8(a) program in getting federal contracts. Missouri Senator Claire McCaskill introduced her bill in the Senate and Mississippi congressman Bennie Thompson brought a companion bill to the U.S. House of Representatives. McCaskill said her bill would crack down on waste and abuse in contracting. Alaska Native Corporations would not be able to receive sole source contracts over $3.5 million, under her bill. It also would be up to the ANCs to prove that they are economically and socially disadvantaged.

Native 8(a) Works, a group formed to protect the existing 8(a) program, say that McCaskill's bill is misguided and wrong. Native business leaders pointed to the success of 8(a) involvement, saying that it created 35,000 jobs worldwide, allowed NANA to pay out $20 million in dividends, and provided for $11.1 million in scholarships from Alaska Regional Corporations.

Opponents of her bill include Alaska Senator Mark Begich, who points out that McCaskill had no problem steering legislation that brought millions of dollars in sole source contracts to Boeing in her home state. Alaska Congressman Don Young also minced no words expressing his displeasure with the bill. "Rep. Thompson is from Mississippi and knows nothing about Alaska Natives," Young said. Pundits don't expect the bill to go anywhere during the "lame duck" session.

Alaska delegation: Keep Frankenfish away from the kitchen table

The Alaska delegation continues the fight against genetically engineered salmon and introduced legislation to stop the Food and Drug Administration from approving the proposal from AquaBounty Technologies. AquaBounty wants to produce a hybrid Atlantic salmon with a Chinook salmon growth gene and an antifreeze gene from an eel. Congressman Don Young and Senator Mark Begich sponsored bills that would put a ban on genetically engineered fish and a bill that would mandate labeling of the fish. The delegation is worried that the engineered fish could harm wild Alaskan salmon and pose risks to human and environmental health.

NSEDC celebrates restaurant opening at Anchorage airport

Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. (NSEDC) and HMSHost Corp. celebrated the grand opening of Norton Sound Seafood House at Ted Stevens Anchorage International Airport Nov. 16. The restaurant began to operate in early October.

"NSEDC is excited to have the opportunity to partner the worldclass crab, halibut and salmon of the Norton Sound region with the extensive experience and knowledge of HMSHost." said Janis Ivanoff. NSEDC's chief executive officer. "The Norton Sound Seafood House offers our state's visitors and residents alike the quality seafood that Alaska and Norton Sound are so well-known for.'

The restaurant's menu features seafood items created by television

Chef Al Levinsohn. Selections include Chef Al's Alaskan Crab Po Boy, Original Ale battered Halibut Po Boy, and Original Ale battered Halibut and King Crab Cake Dinner. The restaurant's bar serves beer, wine and cocktails.

Located on Concourse C. the 4,125-square-foot restaurant is designed to serve travelers both preand post-security. Norton Sound Seafood House provides seating for 122 persons in the post-security main dining area, and seating for 14 in the pre-security grab-n-

Brevig Mission chooses Sectot for NSEDC board seat

Votge margin is wide

By Laurie McNicholas Walter Seetot won a special election held Nov. 16 in Brevig Mission to select the community's representative on the Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board of directors. Sectot received 47 votes, compared to 23 for incumbent Reggie Barr and three for Warren S. Rock, reports Brevig Mission City Clerk Allen Okpealuk.

Sectot formerly served for a number of years as Brevig Mission's NSEDC board member and as chairman of the scholarship committee. He chose not to run for reelection in 2007.

Okpealuk has said the NSEDC board seat election originally set for Oct. 5 could not be held because the city ran out of toner and ballots could not be printed.

Project updates

The first new pump at the Sixth Avenue pump house is operational and is providing normal water pressure to Icy View and the Rec Center. The additional pumps are being wired and are expected to be operational by the end of November. These pumps will serve the new hospital.

Handeland reported that the directional bore drilled under the Snake River is completed and the conduit has been pulled through. However, with the onset of winter further work is not planned till the spring thaw.

At the request of Norton Sound Economic Development Corp., Handeland met to discuss its fuel program. NSEDC would like to work out modifications that would allow NJUS to participate in the future, even if NJUS does its own procurement as a member of the Western Alaska Fuel Group. Further discussion will be held in Nome in December.

Misty Hull, the USDA's grant specialist visited Nome earlier this month to review funding applications, and, as a result, NJUS will be requesting acquisition of a new sewer vac truck and replacement of a hydraulic excavator.

In other business Handeland reported that:

- · Mikunda and Cottrell is still working to modify their audit report to include a federal single audit
- · Several firms have expressed interest in performing geotechnical evaluation and facility design to move forward on design of a new shop-office complex. These activities are being funded through a community development block grant.

- Handeland and Doug Johnson met with HMH Consulting on the air permit renewal application. Further analysis of load growth is underway.
- Richard Stromberg, AEA wind program manager, met with Handeland and Mayor Denise Michels. AEA wants NJUS to move forward with the development of concrete plans for the proposed NJUS wind farm on Newton Peak. NJUS will be contacting previously identified consultants to review the prior business plan, as well as continue monitoring. NJUS respectfully declined to modify its grant to provide additional funding to study integration and release a portion back to AEA until such a time as NJUS is ready to proceed with construction.

Handeland will be traveling to Iowa to PCS, the company that makes NJUS's billing/accounting software. NJUS will implement this new program in January. It would be possible for customers to access their bills via the Internet, have paperless statements, credit bureau reports, skip locators, etc.

The board cancelled its proposed executive session on labor contract negotiation strategies, because Handeland had to hurry to catch the jet.

The next board meeting will be Dec. 14.

Cold meds

were involved in the possession, use and distribution of over-the-counter drugs, including cold pills and cough syrup," said Nome Elementary Principal Dave Keller Nov. 18.

Containing the active ingredient dextromethorphan, or DXM, cough medicine has been abused for decades as a recreational drug, from Romilar in the 1960s and Robitussin in more recent times. Those abusing the substance may drink an entire bottle of the liquid medicine or take several pills beyond the recommended dose. The effects of the drug range from euphoria and hallucinations to paralysis and psychosis, and are similar to those received by taking PCP or ketamine. In extreme cases, overdoses involving the drug have been tied to the death of teenagers.

Papasodora said in addition to the students caught at school, his officers have been finding empty Robitussin bottles around town in areas like Anvil City Square and parking lots. In addition to the problem of children abusing the drug, the police chief said their manner of obtaining the medicine is also an issue. "Kids aren't buying it, they're stealing it," Papasodora said.

Representatives from Nome's three major grocery stores were reluctant to talk in detail about how they handle the storage and sales of the medicines. "We have stepped our security and surveillance systems," said Mike McNally, the manager from Nome's AC store. "That's all I can say." McNally said giving specifics on how the store's security system works would undermine its effectiveness.

Bill Cash of Nome Trading Co. declined to speak on record on the issue. A manager at Hanson's said Nov. 19 that she needed to speak with Safeway's media relations department before making any comment. Representatives from neither Hanson's or Safeway called back to comment.

Visits to the larger grocery stores Nov. 19 found that all three had the cold and cough medicine readily available on their shelves alongside other over-the-counter medications. At Hanson's, signs surrounded the shelves telling shoppers that the area is under video surveillance and that certain medications are in limited supply. A sign by the interior door at Nome Trading Co. states that the store will not sell medications to anyone younger than 18 years old. There were no obvious signs near the shelves containing medication at the AC store; however, buying cough syrup required an extra step at the checkout stand. "I guess we've had kids stealing this," the checker said.

BAD MEDICINE?—When used properly, cold medicine can provide relief. Kids in Nome, however, have been caught using massive doses of the over-the-counter medication to get high.

stores showed a wide selection of products that contain the active ingredient dextromethorphan. Pretty much any medicine containing a cough suppressant, both in liquid or pill form, will have it. A box of 24 tablets approximately contains an equal amount of dextromethorphan as a 4-ounce bottle of cough syrup. Some of the medications contain a mix of ingredients, such as acetaminophen and dextromethorphan in some cold and flu pills. An overdose of these products can cause additional problems with organs such as the liver and kidneys.

In the case of the students caught with the medication at Nome Elementary, Principal Keller said the school's disciplinary measures call for a one- to three-day suspension for a first offense, as well as notification to parents and law enforcement. Keller said a student tipped off a teacher to the problem. "At the elementary level, kids are pretty transparent and are willing to report when something isn't right," Keller said.

Keller said the school's response has been more focused on education than punishment. He said the school also wants to focus on helping the students involved in the situation. Keller said this was the first substance abuse incident that the school has been aware of this year.

Keller said the incident has served as a springboard to discuss substance abuse issues with students. He said he is working with the Nome Community Center to bring a drug education program to the school. The incident has also spurred the school to ask parents to speak with their children about the dangers of substance abuse. He said it's important that children hear that message from their parents.

He also asked parents to check their own medicine cabinets to make sure medicines that could be abused are kept out of reach. "It certainly is a wake-up call," Keller said. "But it's also something a parent would take note of with their own medication."

Steve Gast, principal at Nome-Beltz Junior and Senior High School, said there have been no instances to his knowledge regarding cough medicine abuse at the campus. "We have not caught anybody at this point in time," he said. Gast said the only known substance abuse issue at the school so far this year—outside of tobacco violations—has been caffeine pills found by a teacher in the hallway. Just because no one has been caught with a banned substance, Gast said that does not mean it isn't happening. "We're not turning a blind eye that it exists out there," he said. "And when we do come across a kid that is having an issue, we're going to try and get them help."

Police Chief Papasodora asks that community members and parents keep an eye out for kids abusing medication. "If you happen to observe unusual behavior in your children or other children in the community, please take the appropriate steps to insure the behaviors are not the product of consumption of cold remedies," he wrote in a press release. "As with any situation, if you believe your child has ingested these medications, immediately seek medical assistance."

ond phase of installing digital controls for the district's heating and ventilation systems at a cost of $90,000 to $110,000.

The board's ranking of capital projects—as well as a second list of more general positions on statewide education issues—came at a work session held at the elementary school Nov. 16. Board members Barb Amarok, Betsy Brennan and Marie Tozier worked with Nome Public Schools Superintendent Jon Wehde to prioritize the list that will be forwarded to the City of Nome for inclusion in the city's legislative priority list.

The sprinkler and alarm system is a new addition to the annual list on which some projects can sit for many years. Wehde said the sprinklers and alarm are a must-have for safety reasons. "Fire alarm upgrades go to the top of the list," he told the board. The superintendent said the gym floor is also a safety issue, albeit one that does not require as immediate attention as the fire alarm. "I would say, in terms of safety, the gym floor rises to top after fire alarm," Wehde said. "It isn't a standing hazard, but it has become less supportive as a fall surface and is definitely in need of being replaced."

Wehde said addressing energy costs through the proposed lighting upgrades and digital controls on the heating system will become increasingly important as prices for heating fuel and electricity only rise in Nome.

The district's chief priority from last year was able to be removed from the list after it landed near the top of the state's list of educational capital improvement projects recommended for funding. Ranking number three, Nome Public Schools' request for more than $680,000 to fund boiler replacements at the elementary school is all but guaranteed to be funded. "It isn't likely that the governor or legislators would chop it back to number three," Wehde said, noting that approximately the top 15 projects on last year's list received funding. This state's list to be presented to the Legislature this year has 117 projects seeking funds.

Simply having a project on a local priority list doesn't directly translate to its inclusion on the state's catalog of projects. Wehde told the board it took him several days to complete the detailed application process to get the boiler project on the state's list. The intensity of the application process partially plays into the district's decision to only selectively propose projects for state funding. "We've been rather successful right along working one at a time," Wehde told the board.

While state funding for the boiler project is likely to come after this year's legislative session, the elementary school is already enjoying the heat from the new boilers. The school district has taken the approach to pay for and accomplish the project up front before going to the state for reimbursement. The tactic has worked well, Wehde said.

As for the fire alarm and sprinkler project that heads this year's list for the district, Wehde said he was not sure how the district would approach tackling the project. He said if the capital improvement budget has the funds available, the district could go about completing the project on its own and again seek reimbursement from the state. He said the City of Nome may be willing to partner for the project as it has with past jobs. The district could also apply directly to the state to forward fund the project.

Wehde said the decision to upgrade the system came after it was decided that the building was in good enough shape to be of continual service to the district. Currently there is a fire alarm system in the building, however, there is no sprinkler system as is the case in other district buildings that house students.

Second list has broader focus

Brick and mortar projects were not the only items the school board members ranked for the state's consideration. Each year the school district puts forth a list of joint priorities it shares with the Alaska Association of School Boards. The Nome board largely kept last year's list intact while making a few additions. Again topping the list will be the request that districts across the state receive "sustained, reliable, equitable and adequate" funding through a nonvolatile source. Jumping to second on this year's list is a request for more emphasis on younger children through universal access to education for three- and four-year-olds.

The top five is rounded out by requests for the state to increase the 20 percent block grant for special needs education, to address insurance and health care costs, and to address the rising costs of energy. The board also opted to add items that were not included on last year's list, specifically addressing the desire to have Native languages taught in the state's schools, the need for suicide prevention programs, the need for more support staff in schools, transportation costs and concern over the narrowing of eligibility for Denali Kid Care.

Wrestlers pin second in Bethel

By Tyler Rhodes

It was another week, another win for Nanook wrestler Gabe Cabrera.

Wrestling at 119 lbs, Cabrera worked his way to a win at the Bethel Invitational over the weekend, leading the Nanooks to a second-place overall finish.

Bethel handily took the top honors at its tournament, scoring 253 points to Nome's 147. Nikiski placed an even more-distant third with 105.5 points.

Also putting on strong individual performances for Nome were Tyler Eide who took second place at 112 lbs, and David Stickel who scored the runner-up spot at 135 lbs. Nome also had wrestlers place third: Dion Williams (125 lbs), Roger Ozenna (145 lbs), and Jeff Rose (152 lbs). Junyor Erikson (130 lbs) and Quinn Tozier (171 lbs) both took fourth. Albert Iyahuk also wrestled his way to a place showing, finishing sixth at 160 lbs.

Nome's wrestlers will take the Thanksgiving week off before traveling to Kotzebue for the regional tournament Dec. 3-4. The state tournament will take place the next weekend in Nikiski.

Chamber aims to reverse tourism trend

By Tyler Rhodes

In a recent report to the Nome Common Council, Mitch Erickson of the Nome Chamber of Commerce said that while tourism in Nome doesn't appear to be radically declining, it isn't what it used to be, either.

'Nome has not seen any serious decline in our tourist numbers during this recent recession. We cater more to the world-wide independent traveler that is somewhat immune to the swings of the world economy," Erickson wrote in his report that estimated a 90 percent occupancy rate for accommodations in Nome over the summer.

While Nome may have dodged the economic downturn in terms of tourism, thing can be-and have been-better. "There is no doubt that we are down on our numbers since our heydays in the '70s-'80s,' Erickson wrote, citing a state study in 2003 that estimated 2,000 visitors came to Nome on Alaska Airlines package tours in 2002. Erickson wrote that visitors used to number around 10,000 in the 1970s and 1980s.

While not in a freefall, Erickson wrote that tourist numbers seem to be slowly slipping over the past decade as well. Measuring by the number of visits to the Nome Visitors Center a metric Erickson says may not be the best measure of actual visitors to Nome—there appears to be a loss of around 2,200 visitors a year when comparing 2009 to 2000. In 2000, the report noted 6,095 visitors made a call on the center; 4,410 in 2004; and 3,850 in 2009. "There is no one reason for this decline, but an accumulation of factors," Erickson wrote.

Erickson said the increased opportunity to do things elsewhere in Alaska that were once more or less a unique Nome experience could play into the trickling decline. He noted gold panning, dog mushing and dredge tours as examples. He also noted the larger tour companies have expanded their operations to offer guests little chance to do business with other operators. Erickson pointed to the example of cruise ship companies that bring visitors to the state by boat and then usher them onto their busses and train cars that will take visitors to the company-owned hotel.

Some of the drops in tourism numbers are just a mystery, Erickson wrote. "Nome was a popular destination for visitors from Taiwan with an estimated 3,500 arriving here in the summer of 1999," he wrote. "We had zero Taiwanese in 2010. What happened? Where did they go? I don't know.'

MORE TO COME? - The Hapaq-Lloyd Cruises ship Hanseatic glows in the sunrise at its final destination in Nome, Sept. 9. The Nome Chamber of Commerce is hoping to bring in more ships and visitors by all means of transportation through several programs to entice tour operators and travel writers.

Plans to draw them in

In addition to painting a picture of Nome's trends in tourist visits, Erickson's report also offered ideas to bring the visitors back.

Among the ideas to lure more visitors to the area are an expanded website for the visitors center, familiarization tours for media, developing relationships with cruise operators, and making it easier for conventions and meetings to choose Nome as the location for their event. Some of the ideas have already been put into motion, Erickson wrote.

Erickson said a visit organized for tour operators in March has likely yielded results as a group of 15 may come to Nome this March to take part in activities such as crabbing on the sea ice, musk ox viewing, an exhibition of Native games and carvings, and a helicopter tour. The familiarization tour, organized with the Alaska Travel Industry Association, brought six operators from the Lower 48 and England to Nome.

Erickson said other operators have scouted Nome on their own, including a group that plans to do bike and kayaking tours in the area. He said the group, Sockeye Cycle, would like to hire local tour guides if they establish and operation and use facilities such as the Solomon Bed and Breakfast.

Erickson said media contact has also been bumped up in the last year, including a visit by Sarah Palin's reality television show which filmed an episode in the area. Chamber representatives also spent time with Leonardo DiCaprio's production company as it scouted for potential Alaska locations for potential filming. The chamber also sent Richard Beneville on Alaska Travel Association trips known as Alaska Media Road Shows. The trips to Santa Barbara, Calif., and New York City, featured a number of appointments with journalists who had previously been given information on the area. Erickson said the success of the media road tours is judged by the number of articles written on the area over the next year. "To date, we had National Geographic come to Nome on a photo shoot. So, the jury is still out on the program's effectiveness," he wrote in the September report.

In terms of better promoting Nome as a hot spot for conventions and meetings, Erickson said the chamber staff will provide "turnkey" services for potential clients so that they don't have to deal with site selection, contract negotiations and meeting services. Erickson said the approach would allow clients to put more focus on planning the actual meeting. The service costs clients a fee. The first client was Norton Sound Health Corp. for its 40-year celebration held Nov. 4.

In regard to cruise ship operators and the reduction in ships stopping in Nome over the last few years, Erickson said the chamber has been working to bring other operators into Nome. Over the past year we have been developing a relationship with Heritage Expedition LTD, to use Nome as their 'homeport' for their Russian Far East cruises," he wrote. Erickson said the company uses Russian vessels and crews to allow access to Russian Far East ports, which created complications in having the ships dock in Nome this summer. During the summer Beneville's Nome Discovery Tours acted as a shore expediter to transfer visitors to Bering Air, which flew the visitors to Provideniya or Anadyr. "Our goal with Heritage is to have them home port their vessel here and have their clients fly directly to Nome on their own," Erickson wrote. "Currently all cruises that sail out of Nome are started in Anchorage then once they get to Nome, they do a quick tour then onto the ships. By having the clients fly directly to Nome, there is a good chance that each traveler will spend an extra day or two here in Nome. Heritage is looking at 240 clients traveling through Nome next summer. This is an ongoing project that we are very excited about and will continue working on."

With the holiday season quickly approaching, the state Department of Transportation is aiming to reduce traffic congestion and curbside waiting time at airports by using new 'cell phone" parking lots.

Cell phone parking lots offer motorists who are picking up arriving airline passengers a nearby location where they can wait in their vehicles free of charge.

At the Ted Stevens Anchorage International Airport, the cell phone lot is located in a designated area of the Department of Transportation Central Region Headquarters parking lot, just two minutes away from both the South and North terminals. There are 15 parking spots available during the work week (Monday through Fridays from 7:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.) and more than 30 spots during the evening and on weekends.

When driving to the Anchorage airport, motorists can easily find the cell phone lot by turning right at the Aviation Avenue exit from International Airport Road and following the signs to the lot.

"Drivers simply wait until arriving passengers have deplaned, collected luggage and called to be picked up outside the baggage claim area, said John Parrott, TSAIA Airport Manager.

"There is no parking or waiting allowed on the airport roadway shoulders, so motorists will either drive around and around increasing congestion and wasting fuel or take advantage of the free cell phone lot or pay to park.'

At Juneau International Airport, a lot is located next to Alaska Industrial Hardware and Shell Simmons Drive. It is available for people waiting for their arriving passengers.

The public is reminded that there is no waiting along the curb in the loading/unloading zone.

Additional parking service information for Anchorage is available online at www.anchorageairport.com.

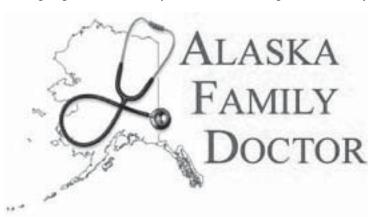

How to Prevent Holiday Weight Gain

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Many view weight gain as an inevitable part of the holiday season. But here is a little-known fact that may surprise you: most people gain less than one pound each year between Thanksgiving and New Year's Day.

percent of them gaining around five pounds each year.

Unfortunately, in the majority of study participants, this low-level weight gain is not lost over the remainder of the year. This leads researchers to believe that most people become overweight and eventually

According to researchers at the National Institute of Health most people gain 0.8 pounds between late September and the end of December. People who are already overweight tend to gain weight at a faster rate during this time period with up to ten obese from years of accumulating small amounts of weight during the holiday months.

The good news is that excess weight gain can be prevented by a simple management of calories.

After an individual eats, the calories from sugar, fats, and protein are either used by the body as energy, or stored for later use in expanding fat cells. Every 3,500 calories consumed and not used for energy is converted to one pound of fat. Therefore, if a person can reduce the number of excess calories consumed, or increase the calories burned during the holiday season, he or she will not gain weight.

Preventing holiday weight gain is not as hard as some would think, though it does take persistence. The traditional 0.8 pounds of weight gain can be prevented by reducing calorie consumption or by increasing physical activity. This is likely no surprise. However, the human body is hard-wired to gain weight in order to survive in hard times, and managing this tendency takes forethought.

The human body is designed to tightly balance the calories consumed with the calories expended in physical activity. A person who increases daily activity will inevitably desire to increase the calories consumed to replace what was expended during exercise. On the other hand, when a person eats a little extra, he or she will find ways to expend this energy with physical activity or an increased body temperature.

The balance is kept almost perfectly. However, the human body errs ever so slightly on the side of storing energy for later use. According to the NIH research, this extra ranges from just 31 calories a day for the majority of people up to 200 calories a day for about ten percent of people who are genetically predisposed to weight gain.

Therefore, in most people, only 31 calories a day need to be avoided or, if consumed, exercised away to prevent weight gain. That is the number of calories in one large bite of turkey, one spoonful of cranberry sauce, or one sip of eggnog. If a person takes that extra bite, 31 calories can be burned off by walking briskly for about three blocks.

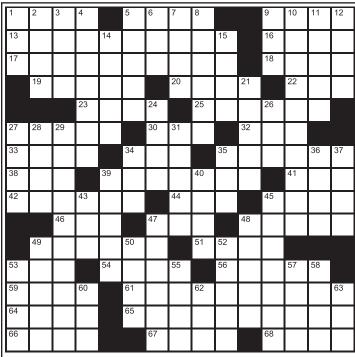

So go into the holiday season with a plan for managing calories. In addition to healthy food choices, use a smaller plate during holiday meals and consider adding a daily walk to the holiday traditions. These small steps can mean the difference between gaining weight this season and maintaining a healthy body mass index.

Ferdinand Swanson

Ferdinand Swanson, of Palmer, Alaska died Sunday, September 26, while residing at the Palmer Veteran's and Pioneer's Home.

Born in Haycock, Alaska, November 27, 1936, to Oscar and Elizabeth Swanson. 'Ferdie' was the eldest of five siblings. Before completing high school, Ferdie was enlisted into the U.S. Army in 1960, serving honorably for six years. Following, he earned a commercial pilot's license and purchased a plane while working Alaska's booming construction industry as an oiler in the Local 302. By the late 1970s Ferdie sought and earned his high school diploma. Continuing union work across Alaska until retiring in the early 1990s, Ferdie lived in Anchorage and the MatSu Valley until his passing.

Ferdie or 'Freddie' as many called him was a dedicated godfather helping raise Miricle Girten and keeping a close family relationship to the end. Known as uncle and cousin to many, he leaves behind a storied life full of notoriety, hardship, triumph and example.

Mentioned by name in Jon Krakauer's book, "Into The Wild", Ferdie was credited as being one of the hunting party that found the corpse of Christopher McCandless in the Denali Park bus. Losing both legs to diabetes didn't slow him down. In spite of having double prosthetic legs and advancing age he maintained a self-reliant life keeping a driver's license. One day experiencing a heart attack in 2005, he drove himself into Anchorage to the hospital. He amazed doctors with a determination and faith in God that overcame physical setbacks time and time again, all the while giving more to people than he received from Ferdie was preceded in death by his parents, Oscar and Lizzie; siblings Ruthie Eileen, Charles Alan, Vernon and Oscar Reese Swanson, aunt Edna Templeton and Ebba Hamm; uncles Carl, Walter and Charles Swanson; cousins Gladyne and Linda Templeton, Mamie and Gloria Hamm, Diane McCloud, and Alan Austermuhl. He is survived by goddaughter Miricle Girten of Eagle River; nephews Douglas, Charles Warner and Willy Swanson of Koyuk; cousins Geri Austermuhl and Willie Templeton of Anchorage, Alan Rylander of Kasilof, Daphne Gustofson of Fairbanks, Elaine Collin and Alan Hamm.

Ferdie was laid to rest on his birthday at the town of his birth at Haycock, Saturday, November 27.

Saying it Sincerely

Give Thanks to the Lord, for we are Blessed!

By Pastor Mike Christian, River of Life Assembly of God for the Nome Ministerial Association

I smell the mouth-watering aroma of a basted turkey coming from the kitchen. I smell the savory stuffing as its spicy flavor makes its way through the house. I smell the sweetness of the candied yams and the overwhelming odor of the pumpkin pies as they bake in the oven. (Is your mouth watering yet?) I hear the laughter of my granddaughters as they play and enjoy this special day when everybody is gathered together to celebrate this wonderful holiday of "Thanksgiving." It's at this very moment that I realize that life is truly good and we are truly blessed!

Throughout the day we will have the opportunity to share our joy with each other and perhaps even reach out to those around us who are less fortunate than we are. We'll watch the football game and make the "tough calls" that the referees seem to miss time after time. We'll sit and laugh and play and just enjoy being with each other on this day of "Thanksgiving." But eventually, just like always, this day too shall come to and end. We'll fall asleep and awake the next morning to begin our day, just as we have always done in the past, in the usual way. Sure, we'll remember how great the Thanksgiving dinner was yesterday, and if we're fortunate, we'll even have enough turkey left over that we can have some sandwiches throughout the next few days. Although I'm not sure we can say the same for the pies and other desserts that may have graced our tables previously.

But in the midst of all this celebration, I wonder if we will truly remember to be thankful for the way God has blessed us throughout the previous year. Will we stop for more than a minute or two, and truly give thanks for the blessings that surround us? My friend, first and foremost, let us give thanks for our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, who has provided atonement for our sins through his shed blood on Calvary's cross. Let us give thanks for the opportunity he has given us to live each and every day in his presence and power. We have a lot to be thankful for this holiday season. My prayer is that each of us will take the time as we sit around the table, to truly give thanks for all the blessings the Lord has provided for us. I want to wish each and every person a happy Thanksgiving this year. May the Lord continue to shine his light upon you and bless you in a powerful way as you call upon him and serve him each day. "Give thanks to the Lord, for he is good; his love endures forever!" — Psalm 107:1

Anchorage has cancer drug shortage

AP - Cancer doctors say a national shortage of a chemotherapy drug has hit Anchorage. The shortage of doxorubicin is disrupting treatment for local patients and could affect dozens more if it continues. The generic drug is also known as Adriamycin. Alaska Native Medical Center director of hematology-oncology Dr. Greg Marino says it's a common choice to treat certain breast cancer patients, but there are alternatives for that. He says doxorubicin is vital in helping cure lymphoma. Marino told the Anchorage Daily News that other choices for lymphoma are not backed by the same level of evidence or are more toxic.

The shortage is a nationwide issue. The federal Food and Drug Administration is seeing a record number of shortages this year, said an associate director of the FDA's drug shortage program. Most shortages are for injectable drugs, including three used to treat cancer. An MSNBC online story from Oct. 27, said that about 40 percent of the shortages are attributable to manufacturing problems, 20 percent are because a firm just stops making a particular drug, and 20 percent are because of production delays. The underlying reason for the shortage is that the drugs are not as profitable as other newer

Donlin Creek JV sponsors Iditarod

The Donlin Creek LLC, a joint venture between NovaGold Resources Inc. and Barrick Gold, gained principal sponsorship status with the Iditarod when it shelled out $285,000 to support the last great race. NovaGold is the Canadian parent company of Alaska Gold Co. and owner of the idle Rock Creek mine.

The Donlin Creek gold mine is in the planning stages as the partners have a preliminary estimated gold reserve of 33 million ounces. The prospect is located near the village of Crooked Creek, on the Kuskokwim River. Donlin Creek LLC plans to submit permit applications in 2011. In order to power the prospective mine, Donlin Creek proposes to build a buried gas line from Cook Inlet to Donlin Creek, bisecting 70 miles of the Iditarod trail through Rainy Pass.

FREEZING RAIN—People walk carefully after freezing rain made it very difficult to walk around Nome on Nov 21.

Wet weather creates havoc

By Tyler Rhodes

You could call it a little gift from Hawaii.

Most Nomeites just called it terrible. In official weatherman's terms, the coating of ice Nome had to deal with Sunday and Monday was the result of a strong southerly flow that came into the region from Hawaii. Meteorologist Jim Hancock at the National Weather Service also had a more succinct summation of the weekend weather. "It was a lot of rain," he said.

The warm, wet system dropped almost an inch and a half of rain on Nome over three days and cut the area's snowpack from four inches down to a single inch. It was that snow and the frozen ground that allowed the rainstorm to make such a mess of town and surrounding areas. More than a few cars slid along or off Nome's roads, and walkers navigated between thick piles of slush and treacherous water-coated ice. Hancock said the rain was spread throughout the Bering Strait region.

The three-day total of 1.47 inches from Friday to Sunday is the second most prolific three-day deluge seen in November in Nome. The record of 1.65 inches over three days in November was set in 1935. Sunday's rain, however, did set a one-day record for the date with .93 inches falling and making a mess of streets, yards and sidewalks. The previous record for Nov. 21 was .35 inches set in 1947.

On Monday morning Hancock said the rain and drizzle should yield to snow and colder temperatures as the week progressed. The rainy weekend, however, will likely leave its mark for some time to come. If temperatures take their normal and extended winter trip to below-freezing levels, the considerable layer of ice left by the storm is likely to remain with us for months.

As the week started, the rest of the state appeared to be getting a taste of Nome's woes. Rain falling on the Interior and Southcentral regions Monday spurred road advisories in Fairbanks, the Mat-Su and Anchorage. Classes were cancelled at some schools and university campuses, and the state was calling on employees in some areas to stay home if they had not made it to work already by mid-morning.

Body recovered from Grantley Harbor ice

By Tyler Rhodes

Rescue teams Monday were able to find and recover the body of a 44-year-old Teller woman who died after falling through the ice while riding on a snowmachine between Teller and Brevig Mission Nov. 24.

According to Shishmaref rescue coordinator Glenn Nayokpuk, Barbara Scholten was found after search teams were able to fan out in pairs as ice conditions on Grantley Harbor solidified five days after the accident. Scholten had originally fallen through the ice a little more than a mile offshore while riding on a snowmachine with Marvin Okleasik on the way to Brevig Mission to play bingo. Okleasik was able to get on top of the ice and walk back to Teller to report the incident.

As temperatures dropped over the Thanksgiving holiday weekend and Monday, Nayokpuk said crews were

Council stalls on medical rules for commercial drivers

By Laurie McNicholas

The Nome Common Council tabled a proposed ordinance that would replace state medical standards for school bus drivers with federal medical requirements for drivers of any commercial motor vehicle at a meeting on Nov. 22. The proposed ordinance also would amend ordinances covering the issuance and renewal of taxicab licenses, and the denial or revocation of taxicab or motor bus licenses.

During a public hearing on the proposed ordinance, John Handeland criticized a provision that would replace the Alaska Administrative Code medical standards for school bus drivers with the Code of Federal Regulations medical requirements for persons seeking permits to drive commercial motor vehicles.

Plan aims to have more students graduate on time

By Tyler Rhodes

As of Thanksgiving, nearly four dozen high school students at Nome-Beltz—almost 31 percent of the high school student population—were not on track to graduate with the rest of their class.

On the Web:

www.nomenugget.net E-mail:

nugget@nomenugget.com

Nome-Beltz Principal Steve Gast presented a plan to the Nome Board of Education Nov. 23 that aims to whittle those numbers down as close to zero as possible. Using online courses through a company called Apex Learning, Gast said the school will eventually offer students who are lagging behind the chance to catch up during the school day. "They could kick out a class in a number of weeks," he told the board during its work session at the Nome Elementary School library.

The initiative aims to cut the high school's dropout rate by catching students at the moment they start falling behind and working to put them back on track as quickly as possible. Gast stressed that early intervention is key in giving students who fail classes a chance to graduate on time, citing a national study that showed most students who drop out are already lagging behind their classmates by the 10th grade.

Of the 44 who are currently behind, eight are lagging by a half credit, while 21 need to make up between one and two credits. A semester-long course generally is worth a half credit. Fifteen students need to make up between 2 1/2 and five credits. Five credits nearly represent a full year of classes.

Gast said the credit recovery program will work to address students falling behind as quickly as possible so that they do not accumulate so many missed credits. "When I've got a kid who's got an F after the first quarter, we better have something ready for the second quarter to address that," he said.

For students who are already having difficulties passing courses, the added burden of taking extra classes can be overwhelming and spur a sense of hopelessness. The district's current credit recovery program requires that the students pay for and take courses on their own time, outside of the school day and largely without help from teaching staff, unless they seek it out on their own. "You're asking a kid who has been failing to go out on his own and do a correspondence course," Gast told the board.

Starting next school year, Gast wants to expand the school day to seven periods (there are currently six) so that classes using the Apex system can be scheduled throughout the school day for students who need to make up credits. The extra period would allow students to take the credit recovery classes while still being enrolled in the rest of the courses they need to take to graduate on time. Under the school's current policies, students are required to re-take classes they fail, a process that often results in yet another failing grade and students' schedules being squeezed so that they are unable to take other classes required for graduation. "This cycle of taking a class, failing, and then taking it again puts the student farther and farther behind, because by taking the course over and over again they are losing future credit time slots needed to repeated courses," Gast wrote in an e-mail to the Nugget.

wrote in an e-mail to the Nugget.

The extra period would also allow teachers from various subjects to be available in the credit recovery classes to aid students as they completed the online class work. "We want to start matching these kids and their needs...with the person who can help them with them," Gast said.

Dear Nancy,

I am writing on behalf of our son David Kelly Tocktoo who passed away on October 16, 2010 from an accidental gunshot wound. He was only 13 years 1month and 16 days old. We would like to express that gun safety is no joke; it is not "just words said."

It is an action that every gun owner must practice. It only takes a minute to make sure all firearms are totally empty and shells are put away properly.

Who knows, it might save your innocent young loved one or a young one you know. For those few out there who have experienced a loss similar to this, understand how important these words are—please promote gun safety!

Thank you, Stewart and Daphne Tocktoo Brevig Mission, AK face of the challenges nature can throw our way. -N.L.M.-

My heart is with the Annogiyuk family because I know exactly what they are going through right now.

When I read the first newspaper article about Jaconiah I got so very upset the way it used the words "drunk" and "staggering." This is as if to prove it might have been his fault or making us look bad.

I don't get it; it seems like most of my fellow islanders disappear only in October.

I smell something behind this because I know in my heart my own son's disappearance is either those last two boys who chased after him, or the cops that were on duty that time are responsible. When I called Nome Police Department I asked have you heard from my son? (when he was just missing 2—2.5 hours) the dispatcher replied to me, "yeah—they got your son Eric, too Laura." Damn, that hurt me. He was in no condition, or drinking, and he and I just ate before the four guys took him out.

But guess what? I called back NPD to check on my son. They told me that they made a mistake to have custody for my son.

I know something is real fishy, Eric, Lance, Jaconiah, and Archie were not found—starting all the way from years ago.

Where? Where did they disappear? They were in Nome for a purpose and all of them are blamed on alcohol. I don't think so. I hate to say this: Can there be a polygraph done on whomever was on duty, please? I know this sounds ridiculous.

Of course they make stories like my son went to Nome to spend his PFD. No way he didn't. That makes me real upset. He went to Nome on October 4, 2004, October 9 was direct deposit and October 12, the rest of PFDs were mailed, and he didn't get PFDs.

He was not fighting either; he was beaten by those four drunk guys, I know now.

I saw him get up dragging his jacket; start running to the alley, and two of the four guys ran after him. That was the last time I've seen my beloved son, Eric. I was at a distance— four houses down, when they beat him up. I will never forget that; he was curled up on the ground.

Whoever may be responsible for these missing people—justice will come to you.

I still want to reach out for my son and hug him, but I can't. Laura M. Apatiki Anchorage, AK 99518

Hi everyone,
It's a laugh. So President Obama says that the job situation is better, that the numbers have gone up. That may be because some people's unemployment benefits ran out.

From our point of view—the jobs are disappearing. I called someone today who used to work for Northwest Campus to ask why he couldn't administer the SAT test to my son—being that he worked for a college—which is a school, right? He told me he was laid off—along with all the other people that work for NWC in the other outlying villages—due to cuts.

And so the Legislators say they should cut this much off of that, and cut something else out. Well—I dare every last one of those Legisla-

News from around the state

Compiled by Diana Haecker Court rules to take Miller lawsuit to Juneau

Fairbanks Superior Court Judge Douglas Blankenship moved Senatorial GOP candidate Joe Miller's lawsuit from Fairbanks to Juneau. Monday's ruling comes in response to a motion by the State of Alaska to move the case to Juneau. Miller filed the suit against State of Alaska's Division of Elections and Lt. Governor Craig Campbell, contesting the way the state interpreted the state's write-in laws. Write-in candidate and incumbent Senator Lisa Murkowski declared victory after ballot counts showed she was more than 10,000 ballots ahead of Miller, Miller ballot count observers contested more than 7.000 ballots, and he alleges voter fraud. Election officials said that voter intent trumped the interpretation of the law that write-in names have to exactly appear as written in filing papers. Murkowski filed to intervene in the lawsuit, but Judge Blankenship left the decision to a judge who is going to be assigned to the case in Juneau.

Murkowski urged for a quick resolution because if she's not sworn in on January 3, one of the two Alaska Senate seats will be left empty. According to AP reports, the Alaska Republican Party last week called on Miller to concede, and former U.S. senator from Minnesota Norm Coleman said it was time for Miller to move on.

Freezing November rain wreaks havoc in Interior, Southcentral

Students in Anchorage, Fairbanks and the Mat-Su Borough were allowed to stay home in the days leading up to the Thanksgiving holidays as freezing rain turned roads into ice rinks and made travel unsafe. The unusually warm weather system spread over most of Alaska and turned snow to freezing slush and left plowed roads coated with glare ice.

In Skwentna, two snowmachiners went through the ice of the Yentna River. All their survival gear went into the water, but they were able to hike roughly 7.5 miles to a cabin, where Search and Rescue troopers found them. Both were transported out and one was flown to Providence Hospital for treatment from exposure to the weather. Troopers noted a few minor single car accidents as motorists lost control of their vehicles on icy roads.

Alaska to accept $23.5M in federal education funds

Although Alaskan teachers are not threatened by layoffs, the Alaska Department of Education and Early Development is about to receive a federal grant to prevent teacher layoffs. The $23.5 million are part of a $10 billion federal program aimed at helping hard-pressed school districts around the nation. While the money was billed for layoff prevention, the U.S. Department of Education allows it to be spent on teacher salaries, performance bonuses, retirement costs and other related expenditures. The money will be divided among Alaska school districts based on the formula used to distribute federal Title I funds for disadvantaged students.

Parnell names more commissioners building In his administration, Governor-elect Sean Parnell last week named Bryan Butcher to head the Department of Revenue and named Bill Streur as acting Health and Social Services Commissioner. Butcher works at the Alaska Housing Finance Corporation as the director of governmental relations and public affairs and advises Parnell on economic development issues. Butcher also is the vice president of the Alaska Gasline Development Corporation and coordinates the governor's transition advisory teams. Streur currently serves as deputy commissioner for Medicaid and health care policy for DHSS. Streur has a bachelor's degree in pre-medicine.

AEA recommends to dam Susitna for hydro power

The Alaska Energy Authority endorsed a large hydroelectric project that met bitter opposition when it was first studied in the 1980s. AEA was tasked to study the feasibility of major Alaska hydroelectric projects including Susitna, Chakachamna and Glacier Fork. The AEA report concluded that the Susitna project at Lower Watana would produce two to three times more energy and at a lower per unit cost than the others. The construction bill is still pegged at more than $5 billion to create a 39mile long water reservoir and a dam site to hold back the massive glacial-fed river.

Governor Parnell threw his support behind the dam, saying that this large-scale hydro project is necessary if Alaska is to meet its goal to generate half of its electricity by renewable resources by 2025. Plans to dam the Susitna have been mulled on and off for more than 50 years. Earlier efforts were abandoned in the past because of concern for salmon, costs involved and the lack of economies of scale, as there were not enough customers for electricity to warrant such a huge project.

Museum again tops city's wish list for Legislature

By Laurie McNicholas

The 2011 Alaska Legislature will focus on two large energy projects—the bullet line option for a natural gas pipeline and a Susitna River hydroelectric project—Wendy Chamberlain told the Nome Common Council Nov. 22 at a work session held to discuss the city's legislative priorities. Chamberlain has served for a number of years as state lobbyist for the City of Nome.

The bullet line is a proposed 24-inch, high-pressure natural gas pipeline that would run parallel to the existing Trans Alaska oil pipeline from Prudhoe Bay to Interior Alaska. From there the line would extend to the Cook Inlet area to connect with the existing distribution system. The project would include construction of a gas treatment plant at Prudhoe Bay to condition raw natural gas for shipment. Cost estimates for the project range from $5.7 billion to $11.8 billion.

The Alaska Gasline Development Corp., a subsidiary of the Alaska Housing Finance Corp., is developing an instate natural gas pipeline plan under terms of HB 369, signed by Gov. Sean Parnell April 26. The AGDC is to deliver a plan to the Legislature by July 1, 2011 that provides for an operational natural gas pipeline by Dec. 31, 2015.

Chamberlain said development of a Susitna Hydroelectric project is a critical issue because southcentral Alaska has gas in Cook Inlet, but not enough for a sequence of days with temperatures below zero. She and Larry Markley, the city's federal lobbyist, said the project would cost $50 billion.

However, on Nov. 24 Gov. Parnell and the Alaska Energy Authority endorsed a proposed Susitna River hydroelectric project that would cost $4.5 million in 2008 dollars. The project would give the state the best chance to meet a state goal to produce 50 percent of Alaska's electrical energy from renewable resources by 2025, according to a 51-page report released by AEA on Nov. 24. Parnell said he will propose legislation to allow AEA to pursue funding for and ownership of the project.

Chamberlain said Anchorage alone is expected to seek $300 million for its port expansion project, so it is likely the Legislature will put together a significant bonding package.

Noting that the Alaska Senate is split evenly between Republicans and Democrats (10-10), Chamberlain said the Senate majority caucus includes all 10 Democrats and six Republicans. She said Sen. Donny Olson, a Democrat who represents District T, will continue to serve on the finance committee. Sen. Lyman Hoffman of Bethel and Sen. Bert Stedman of Sitka co-chair the finance committee.

Republicans picked up four seats in the Alaska House of Representatives in the November election, noted Chamberlain. House Republicans now outnumber Democrats by 23 to 17. Chamberlain said Rep. Neal Foster of Nome, a Democrat who represents District 39, has joined the House majority caucus. "Representative Foster is popular with all of his colleagues," she said, but added: "He is a freshman; he'll have to get in line."

"I wanted to be in the majority." Foster told the council. "Jumping over I think is working out for us." He said he was warmly welcomed to the caucus, noting that his late father, Rep. Richard Foster, had been a member of the majority caucus for years. He said all members of the Bush caucus are in the majority except Beth Kerttula, a Juneau Democrat. Foster said he votes as a block with the Bush caucus, so it would not have made sense for him not to be in the majority. "After redistricting, the House will be more Republican because of Mat-Su, so it makes sense to be with them," he added.

Councilman Stan Andersen asked what Gov. Parnell has in mind for next year's state budget. Chamberlain said Parnell probably will prepare a barebones capital budget of $300 million. Foster predicted that Parnell will hold the line on the operating budget, cutting in some areas and increasing funding in others, such as the Village Public Safety Officer Program.

Foster said he has a good relationship with Parnell and talked with him recently. He said in addition to energy projects, safety, health and education issues are important to the governor.

Markley told the council that large appropriation bills are stalled in Congress. "We're in four bills," he said. Noting that the federal fiscal year began Oct. 1, he said Congress may pass appropriations bills retroactively early in 2011 or just punt and let the government run at last year's level. He said Congress will not pass any appropriations bills except for the military during the current lame duck session.

Everyone is talking about the Congressional push to eliminate earmarks, Markley noted. He said all three members of the Alaska delegation continue to support earmarks. "I have a feeling the spigot is not closed on earmarks, but they will be more difficult to get," he added.

Andersen asked Markley what his main job is in Washington, D.C.

"I stay close to the delegation for Nome and some others," Markley replied. He said he also contacts agencies, most recently the U.S. Coast Guard. Markley noted that he resides in Juneau.

Mayor Denise Michels said council members have copies of a resolution the council approved last year listing the City of Nome's state and federal legislative priorities for 2010. She said Nome Public Schools did a great job preparing its state funding proposals for next year. The council will need to approve a resolution listing the city's legislative priorities for 2011 to present to legislators in January, she added.

State legislative priorities

Funding for a new building to exhibit, house and protect the photographs, artifacts and archives of the Carrie M. McLain Memorial Museum heads the list of state legislative priorities prepared for discussion by the council. Last year the city gave the museum project top priority and named the proposed structure the Richard Foster Building in honor of the late legislator. However, the Legislature allocated only $2 million for construction of the building.

"Do we know what we want next?" asked Andersen in regard to funding for the museum building.

"We're working on it," replied Councilwoman Mary Knodel, who is a member of the Museum Commission.

"I thought we would get more money because of Richard Foster," Chamberlain commented. She said it was difficult for the Legislature to allocate more funds to the project last year because Neal Foster, who was appointed to fill his late father's House seat, was in the minority.

"Right up front we went to [House Speaker Mike] Chenault," Chamberlain recalled. She said the situation is difficult for Neal Foster because the proposed building is named for his father.

Chamberlain suggested that she and city officials arrange to have dinner with Chenault, Rep. Bill Stoltze and other legislators during the second week of the 2011 legislative session and ask, "Did we mishear?"

"I need to look out for the entire district," Foster noted. "...I'm glad Wendy is the go-between."

Other City of Nome projects proposed for legislative funding include:
• Two upgrades for the Nome Recreation Center: (1) A covered multi-use structure for ice skating, skateboarding and other outdoor sports; and (2) an emergency evacuation facility that also could be used for conference rooms for civic events.

- An Arctic access/port causeway expansion project to add a 3,025-foot breakwater east of the existing causeway and a 270-foot spur at the end of the causeway.
- The extension of Steadman Street to the Nome Bypass Road;
- A consortium library for the City of Nome and the University of Alaska Northwest Campus;
- Portable fire gear for the Nome Volunteer Fire Department to deploy to villages in the region.

Andersen suggested that a request from the Public Works Department for a sander, loader and skid steer be deleted from the list of legislative funding requests and placed in the city's budget. Knodel agreed with him.

Utility manager John Handeland said Nome Joint Utility System needs state funds to develop alternative energy production sources such as geothermal, wind and natural gas; and to implement energy storage technology. He also said NJUS will ask the state to expand eligibility and maximum loan limits for participation in the state's Revolving Bulk Fuel Loan Fund.

Nome Public Schools' priorities for legislative funding are:

- A sprinkler/fire alarm upgrade for
- Building D (estimated cost $90,000); • Replacement of the Nome Elementary School gym floor (estimated - cost $100,000 to $160,000);
 A lighting upgrade for all district facilities ($100,000);
- Completion of Phase II of the HVAC Direct Digital Control project at Nome-Beltz High School (estimated cost $90,000).

Federal legislative issues

The following list of federal legislative issues was provided to council members at the work session, but no descriptions of the issues were included and the council did not discuss them. The issues are navigation improvement project cap; small boat harbor turning basin dredging depth authorization; Arctic access port/causeway extension; public safety/fire station; U.S Coast Guard seasonal forward operating location; Alaska Army National Guard Readiness Center; community power generation issues, and extension of the Steadman Street utility corridor.

Deaths mar Thanksgiving

By Tyler Rhodes

With all its celebration and feasting, the Thanksgiving day also brought tragedy to two villages in the region.

The Alaska State Troopers also reported the deaths of two other individuals on Thanksgiving Day. Just before noon Nov. 25, Troopers were notified of the death of a 43-year-old man in St. Michael. Less than a half hour later, Troopers received report of a 23-year-old woman found dead outdoors in Gambell. Alaska Department of Public Safety spokesperson Megan Peters said foul play was not suspected in either case, but alcohol was a factor in both deaths. She said Monday that the investigation continues in both cases. Peters did not provide the names of either individual.

Troopers in the Nome office were unavailable Monday and Tuesday to comment on any of the deaths that occurred over the weekend.

New computer, help recommended for school district office

By Tyler Rhodes

A business consultant hired by Nome Public Schools warned the school board Nov. 23 that the district is running on borrowed time with its computer system that handles financial matters ranging from payroll to budget transactions.

"This machine is 10 years old, way past its useful life. It keeps on cranking...but it's old enough that you could have a computer failure," Melody Douglas told the board during a work session at the elementary school library. Douglas, a consultant who spent 32 years as the business manager for the Kenai Peninsula Borough School District, recommended the district replace the aging system right away.

"In my opinion, this is the most critical matter facing the district at this time," she wrote in a report to the district. "A computer failure while processing payroll would be more than challenging." At the Nov. 23 meeting, Douglas described the potential of not being able to pay the district's employees in more frank terms. "You can hold off vendors for a while, but you just don't miss payroll," she said.

In her report, Douglas wrote that the district's computer is reaching the age where its creator is planning to no longer offer support for the unit. She estimated a purchase price for a new unit at roughly $25,000, noting that costs could be higher when factors such as a printer and training are figured into a purchase.

Douglas' report to the district covers more than just the aging computer unit. Ranging from how often district office personnel should meet to the extent of duties in the business manager's job description, the report covers a number of areas where efficiencies could be found. Douglas made a September and November visit to the district to formulate her report.

Douglas' visits coincide with Nome Public Schools hiring of a new business manager to replace Jenny Martens who moved on to another district. While the district hired a new manager with business experience, Kathy Wojtanek came to Nome with no prior job in the educational arena. The district also didn't get her on board until the school year was already underway.

Douglas recommended the district lighten the load placed on its business manager, both in consideration of a new manager who is new to the arena and the fact that the previous managers were overworked. One method to accomplish that has been to bring on an additional accounting specialist to take over some duties that were previously the charge of the business manager.

The new hire prompted board member Barb Nickels to question if the district was becoming administratively top-heavy when she wanted to see any extra dollars funneled toward classroom instruction. She also asked if the new accounting specialist would have been needed if a more seasoned school business manager had been hired. "Would we actually be filling this extra position if we had hired someone who had 10 years experience in school business?" Nickels asked.

Douglas said she felt the additional hire was necessary no matter who was brought in to fill Martens' shoes. "The addition of the person was based on the fact that you had business managers who were working 60 hours a week, and that's not in the best interest of the district," Douglas said. "If you don't pay attention to infrastructure, it will eventually end up in the classroom."

Nickels said if the district were to add a new administrative position, she would prefer a full-time grant-writer, noting that positions have been added to the district office in the past few years even as the student population—and thus the amount of state funding—has dropped. "If all those dollars could fall down from the sky, we could implement everything. We shrunk by 70 [students a few years ago] and we've added to the district office, and we want to add to the district office again," she said.

Douglas addressed the tracking of grants in her report, noting that a collaborative effort is needed to ensure timelines and reporting requirements are followed.

The district's new manager, Wojtanek, also spoke to the high likelihood of burnout if the job description would not have been slimmed.

"Jenny [Martens] is no longer here because of her work schedule," she said. Wojtanek also noted that no experienced business managers responded to the district's advertisement seeking a new manager. Superintendent Jon Wehde confirmed that no working school business managers were included in the field of approximately 20 applicants for the job.

Wehde said replacing a seasoned business manager and other crucial administrative positions can be much more difficult than replacing senior teaching staff members. "When a senior payroll clerk, business manager, director of facilities walks off, you cannot begin to approach that unless you have a lot of money, or you find someone willing to take the learning curve right on the face," he said.

In the case of the business manager's position, the learning curve is steep and lasts about two years, Douglas said. She also noted that the job has become more difficult and tasked over the years, as school districts have to deal with ever-increasing loads of paperwork and compliance issues. "The compliance component of our jobs is just horrendous," she said.

Board President Gloria Karmun lauded Wo-

Board President Gloria Karmun lauded Wojtanek for taking on the job and accepting the challenge. "I'm impressed with Kathy, her willingness and desire to learn the business management of school," Karmun said.

Credit recovery

Through tweaking things like lunch schedules and passing periods, Gast said the additional period could be fit into the same amount of hours that the current school day encompasses.

More immediately, Gast said he and counselor Vern Rickett would meet by Christmas with each of the 44 students currently behind in credits to form a plan that could get them back up to speed with their classmates. By next year, Gast said he would like to see these individual learning plans for all students, starting at seventh grade. Gast said targeting junior high students with programs like individual learning plans and transition classes to prepare them for the rigors of high school should also reduce the number of students who fall behind in the credit count.

Gast also said he would like to see credit recovery classes offered between 3 p.m. and 4 p.m., an hour when high school teachers are still working, but students are excused. Junior High students are released at 4 p.m., meaning bussing would still be available for high school students staying later to participate in credit recovery courses. For the second semester of this school year, Gast said credit recovery classes could be offered at the later time slot on a voluntary basis. For the next school year, he proposed making the 3 p.m. classes mandatory for those who are behind or are failing a class they are taking at the time-a move that would require a policy change enacted by the board. "Also realize that the plan puts an Apex class in the schedule during every period of the day so students will have the opportunity to make up credit during the school day and still earn the max amount of regular credits," Gast wrote in an e-mail.

School Board President Gloria Karmun asked how the program would be funded. Gast said the costs would be borne by a grant. He said funding for the second semester implementation of credit recovery would be funded under a grant covering migrant education. "Because of the wide range of services offered by Apex it can fall under many different grant sources each year for funding," Gast said in an e-mail. "We are targeting credit recovery, drop out rate and graduation rate—all areas with solid funding sources outside the school for years to come. The goal would be to fund the program each year with sources outside the [Nome Public Schools1 budget.

Gast said in addition to introducing students to the Apex program next semester, he wants to start training teachers on the program.

Why students get behind

Gast said knowing why students fail classes is critical in both getting them back on track and preventing them from falling in a deficit in the first place. The principal brought some numbers to the meeting that shed light on students' difficulties.

Attendance factors large in how well students perform, Gast said. Students who are behind in credits have an average attendance rate of 88 percent. Some of the students had attendance rates as low as 51 percent last year while some had 100 percent attendance.

Students are also falling behind because they are not prepared for the level of class they are entering. Gast said 65 percent of students who are behind are reading below their grade level, 43 percent are at math levels below their peers. He offered the example of a 10th grader trying to pass a history course when they can only read at a sixth grade level.

Board is receptive to plan

Gast's presentation drew questions and praise from the school board, all of whom were present at the meeting. "I'm so impressed, I'm so excited," said board member Barb

2010 NOME

KENNEL CLUB

ANNUAL MEETING

Amarok. Amarok has made dropout prevention one of her main goals as a board member. "Credit recovery and dropout prevention has greatly been on my mind," she said.

Board President Gloria Karmun said she particularly appreciated the idea of forming individualized learning plans for the students, noting that it was personal contact with a school counselor that kept her on track to graduate during her own high school career. "I appreciate you embracing the student one-on-one. That way you catch a student early enough to graduate," she said.

Board member Barb Nickels had a few questions on the implementation of the program, specifically how it was received and how it will impact staff. Gast said he had presented the program in a staff meeting earlier that day. "It was extremely well received by the group," he said.

Nickels also expressed concern that the involvement of the school counselor in the program may be adding more to the job duty than is currently spelled out. The majority of the board replied that they felt such a program was exactly in line with what a counselor should be doing.

Amarok asked if the program could also serve students who had dropped out or left school to get a GED and wanted to come back for a diploma. Gast said each case would vary with how many credits are needed to graduate and the age of the student. State statute only allows students to stay in the public school system until they are 20 years old.

More uses

Beyond being a program offered to students who need to catch up, Gast said the Apex online courses could also serve students looking to go beyond what is currently offered in Nome-Belt's classrooms. The company also offers advanced placement and college test preparation courses. Gast said the online resource could be used concurrently with regular classroom instruction for advanced students, those at grade-level and those who need to catch up. "This whole program is not in place of a course...it's to augment instruction in the classroom in real time while instruction is going on," Gast said.

Feds declare critical habitat for polar bears

By Diana Haecker

The Department of the Interior's U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service last week designated more than 187,000 square miles of on-shore barrier islands, denning areas and offshore sea-ice as critical habitat for the threatened polar bear under the Endangered Species Act. The area it encompasses is 96 percent sea ice but also includes denning habitat within 20 miles of the northern Alaska coastline between Canada and the Kavik River and five miles between the Kavik River and Barrow. The barrier island critical habitat extends the entire barrier island coastline from the Canadian border to St. Lawrence Island in the west and Hooper Bay in the south. Fish and Wildlife officials say that the areas included in the polar bear critical habitat designation do encompass areas where oil and gas exploration activities occurs. Wildlife Service assistant Secretary for Fish, Wildlife and Parks said that the designation makes sure that other federal agencies now have to consult with FWS before permitting activities that could potentially harm the species. "Nevertheless, the greatest threat to the polar bear is the melting of its sea ice habitat caused by human-induced climate change,' Strickland said.

The decision is part of a settlement in a lawsuit by the Center for Biological Diversity, Greenpeace and the Natural Resources Defense Council against the Department of the Interior. The ongoing lawsuit is in regards to the Interior Department's decision to list the polar bear as "threatened," rather than the more protective "endangered" designation.

This decision, still pending in court, could affect whether the Endangered Species Act can be used as a tool to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, the primary threat to the species.

The state has intervened in the lawsuit that brought the designation about. Parnell said the state is considering the options, including a possible legal challenge to the designation. North Slope Borough

Mayor Edward Itta also isn't pleased with the designation.

In a press release he said that he opposes the designation since it doesn't change the fact that the ice is melting and thus it wouldn't improve the fate of the species. However, he fears that the designation would complicate, delay and possibly block construction of community infrastructure like a new runway for Kak-

The Center for Biological Diversity commented on the designation saying that the designation was needed and that species that have critical habitat designated are more than twice as likely to be recovering, and less than half as likely to be declining, as those without it.

"Polar bears are slipping away," said Andrew Wetzler, director of Natural Resource Defense Council's Land and Wildlife Program. "But we know that there are crucial protections that can keep them around. The designation is a start, especially in warding off ill-considered oil and gas development in America's most important polar bear habitat."

In May 2008, the Interior Department listed the polar bear as a threatened species under the Endangered Species Act, but issued a special rule that exempted greenhouse gas emissions from being regulated as a result of the listing.

2011 Bering Sea pollock catch may increase by 56 percent

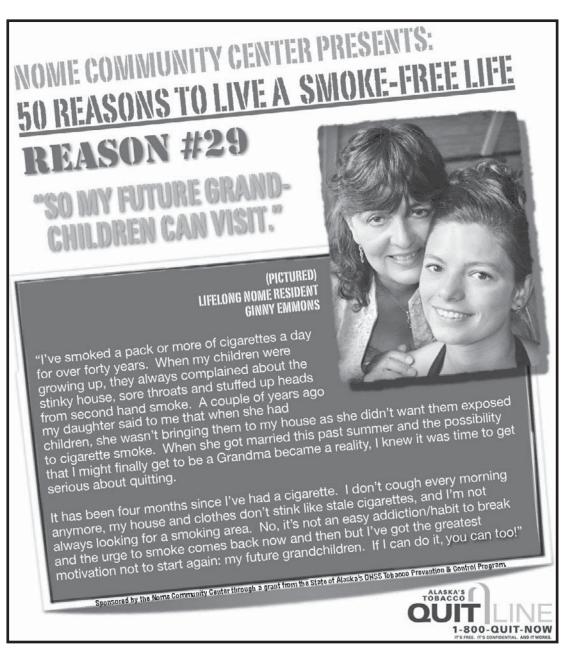

By Laurie McNicholas

The total allowable catch (TAC) of Bering Sea pollock may rise to 1.267 million metric tons next year, a 56 percent increase over the 2010 TAC of 813,000 metric tons. The North Pacific Fishery Management Council will consider scientists' recommendations and take public testimony before setting the 2011 TAC for pollock and other groundfish species in Bering Sea/Aleutian Islands fisheries at a meeting next week in Anchorage.

The council's BSAI groundfish plan team has recommended an acceptable biological catch (ABC) of 1.267 metric tons of Bering Sea pollock next year. The recommendation is based on results of a bottom-trawl survey and a mid-water acoustic trawl survey conducted in the eastern Bering Sea last summer by the National Marine Fisheries Service.

The 2010 survey yielded higher biomass estimates than last year for all species except Alaska plaice, which was down slightly from 2009. The BSAI groundfish plan team also has recommended an ABC of 235,000 metric tons for Pacific cod in 2011, a 35 percent increase over last year's ABC of 174,000 metric tons.

Agencies take unified approach to improve ports

By Diana Haecker

A potential growth in shipping traffic paired with ever-bigger ships calling on ports in Alaska places new demands on regional ports and hubs. The Alaska Corps of Engineers, the Alaska Department of Transportation and Public Facilities as well as the Denali Commission and a host of Alaska port authorities came together a few weeks ago to address the future of Alaska regional ports. And in the process, a list was produced with funding requests from harbors all across Alaska. Nome city manager Josie Bahnke participated in the conference.

The reality of more shipping lines eyeing the shorter Northwest Passage route to deliver goods and tourists from the Atlantic to the Pacific – and vice versa – is prompting increased research. The Alaska Corps of Engineers and the Alaska DOT hired the consulting firm Northern Economics to study global trends in port and harbor development and how it affects Alaska. They also did a regional analysis of community infrastructure and needs.

Assuming that the global warming trend continues, Northern Economics wrote in a white paper that Alaska could become a "transshipment point for vessels transiting the North Pacific great circle route with cargo destined to potential new Arctic Ocean routes." The Northern Sea Route and the Northwest Passage could become useable navigation routes in the next 40 to 50 years due to Arctic sea ice melt. However, they also warn that there are impediments to the use of Arctic sea routes, including seasonality and year-to-year variability, ice-class vessel requirements, vessel support and safety considerations as well as geopolitical issues. The researchers looked at trends and found that shipping lines consolidate and that those global shipping conglomerates are likely to use so called "mega-ships" to haul large amounts of freight around. This, in turn, means that Alaskan destination harbors need to have sufficient depth, storage facilities and infrastructure to accommodate these mega vessels.

The fuel crunch is another trend to be watched as shipping lines deal with increased fuel costs by seeking shorter shipping routes — which would make shipping through the Northwest Passage look attractive — and they try to limit the number of tug and barge trips to remote villages to one or two a year. This would require that smaller communities need additional fuel storage.

All the trends taken into account, the demand for improvements in port facilities includes increasing the depth of water in entrance channels and alongside berths, extending and supporting existing harbors, and providing breakwaters, better cargo handling equipment and storage facilities. Also the need for dredging the ports will grow, as bigger ships are likely to be used in the future.

Northern Economics caution that transportation companies and port operators, whether they be private or owned by municipalities like Nome, should not be the sole beneficiaries of public investments in regional and sub-regional hubs in Alaska, but that regional residents also get their share. Better facilities along the Alaska coastline could result in lower costs for shipping companies and this could bring improved service and lower costs for residents of the hub communities as well as the outlying villages that they support.

If commercially exploitable oil and gas are found in the Chukchi and Beaufort seas, Northern Economics researchers predict a sharp increase in vessel traffic. And this brings a new demand on harbors. Ports and harbors play an important role in maritime safety and prevention of pollution, says Northern Economic's briefing book.

'The lack of places of refuge and emergency response resources on Alaska's North Slope and northwest regions may become a particular area of concern if the anticipated increase in the number of freighters, cruise ships, oil and gas tankers, dry bulk cargo vessels, and resupply barges passing through the Bering Strait and plying the waters of the Arctic Ocean comes about. In coming years, the provision of Arctic port facilities or harbors suitable for refuge for medium to deep draft vessels may become both a national and international imperative," reads the Northern Economics briefing document.

The Corps is the entity that funds ports and harbors with state and local matching funds. Currently, the Corps is conducting feasibility studies at Elim, Little Diomede and Savoonga to evaluate if there is room for increased moorage capacity.

Mike Fisher, project manager with Northern Economics, said that the list that came out of the conference is in the process of being fine-tuned and soon to be made public by the Corps of Engineers. Fisher said he and his team compiled the list from eight sources including the state Department of Transportation, the Corps and funding requests coming out of the communities. He said that funding requests for the Nome small boat harbor included increased docking space, electrical hookups and harbor lighting as well as general repairs, installation of fenders and navigational aides for the port entrance. The requests also mentioned facilities at Port Clarence. Fisher said that a summary of the conference and their research will be compiled by January and the information then is slated to be used by the DOT in the 2030 long-range transportation plan.

Vitamin D: Are you getting enough of this nutrient?

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

The National Academy of Sciences Institute of Medicine released a report earlier this week slightly raising the Dietary Reference Intake levels for vitamin D considered adequate for most Americans. The report states that most people are currently getting the required amount of vitamin D. However, questions remain for special populations, including those living in the far north, regarding how much vitamin D is needed to protect against chronic disease.

Long known to be an important nutrient in bone health and calcium metabolism, vitamin D, also known as 25-hydroxy vitamin D, has become a focus of research in recent years. This research has shown that a deficiency in vitamin D is associated with over 50 diseases affecting every system in the human body.

In 2007, Michael Holick, M.D., Ph.D. published an article in the New England Journal of Medicine in which he described how a deficiency in vitamin D is associated with a growing list of medical problems including bone disease, certain cancers, diabetes, and heart disease.

Since then, other researchers have shown that a healthy vitamin D level may prevent or reduce the risk for influenza, autoimmune arthritis, obesity, multiple sclerosis, and asthma.

There is even evidence that vitamin D supplementation may help ward off the common cold. In 2004, researchers demonstrated that vitamin D given daily as cod liver oil reduced the average number of wintertime pediatric visits for respiratory infections in a group of New York City children.

Vitamin D is naturally produced in the skin after sun exposure. It is not actually a vitamin but a pro-hormone, a molecule that the body converts to a hormone in order to regulate important functions at the cellular level. Receptors for vitamin D are found in every organ of the body.

Sunlight is the primary catalyst for the body to produce vitamin D. People who live in the far north are at risk of vitamin D deficiency because dark winters and poor UVB radiation penetration of sunlight at northern latitudes inhibits the synthesis of vitamin D in the skin.

Unless supplemented in the diet, vitamin D levels in the blood drop significantly in the winter months due to reduced exposure to solar radiation. This effect is seen yearround in those who remain exclusively indoors, like some nursing home patients, or in those who persistently use sunscreen.

When sunlight exposure is limited, vitamin D must be acquired through diet or supplementation. Regular consumption of salmon, seal oil, or marine foods can prevent vitamin D deficiency. One 3.5 oz serving of salmon contains between 600-1000 units of vitamin D3. Supplementation with vitamin D3 can also prevent vitamin D deficiency. The IOM committee recommends 600 units of vitamin D3 daily for anyone over age 1, and 800 units of vitamin D3 daily from all sources for adults over age 71.

A number of physicians now believe these recommendations are overly conservative and recommend at least 2000 units daily from all sources for otherwise healthy adults. Patients with chronic diseases are often prescribed even higher doses.

For comparison, a short time in direct summer sunlight can cause the body to produce around 10,000 units of vitamin D. Toxicity does not occur because the body quickly degrades any unneeded vitamin in the skin.

Vitamin D has become one of the most common screening labs drawn at health fairs or during primary care preventive health visits. The results are used to define a person's risk of deficiency. Vitamin D deficiency is defined as a level less than 20 ng per milliliter. Between 20 and 29 ng milliliter, a person is said to have vitamin D insufficiency. Results of 30 ng per milliliter or higher are considered normal; although it should be noted that people who live in

John Carl Agayuk (Ah-Ga-yuk) Johnson

Surrounded by his closest and dearest family members, John Carl Agayuk (Ah-Ga-yuk) Johnson died peacefully at 4:38 p.m. on November 24 in Nome. He was the third surviving son of the late Albert A. and Frances Johnson of White Mountain and Nome.

John Carl Agayuk Johnson

At an early age, Johnny was afflicted with tuberculosis and spent a number of years at the sanatorium in Seward before returning to his family who had moved to Nome following the closure of the boarding high school at White Mountain.

Johnny completed high school in Nome, spent several years working at the Lomen Company in Nome, then applied for and was hired on by the National Weather Service. He received his training from the National Weather Service in Kansas, and after 30 plus years, achieved a retirement. His continued interest in the current weather patterns did not end upon retirement. Weather service staff patiently accommodated Johnny's continued interest. He could be found bugging them for copies of their most current data on the Following his retirement, he worked periodically for Chukotka Alaska in Nome—a job he really enjoyed because he could share with customers his knowledge of the people and customs of the region, weather information and explain the significance of the merchandise customers contemplated buying.

Ever wonder who started the practice of posting on the air the time of sunrise and sunset hours? It was Johnny. Although the practice of doing that was met with resistance by the National Weather Service at the time, it is now in practice—as you will notice in the Anchorage Daily News. Johnny felt it was important to post the times because our hunters and fishermen needed that critical information. He never received credit for his then radical idea; but the concept eventually made sense and is now common

Johnny truly was an outdoorsman. On weekends and at every chance he could, he would head for Council and White Mountain for fishing and boating. He, like a lot of us, was a collector of "stuff." He was selective about the stuff he collected, though—like stainless steel pots and pans, or odd-ball unique items like small white rocks that when struck together created light. He enjoyed compact disc music-especially music he had heard on the radio as a young man, country gospel music, as well as instrumental and classical music. He once gave out a copy of a real oldie he had found, "Gramma's Lye Soap.'

Although he never married or had children of his own, he opened his heart and his life to his sister Carolyn's children and grandchildren, as well as his older brother's children following the passing of their parents. He considered his grandnephew, Walter Schubert, his grandchild. Walter lovingly called him Papa. Following Walter's birth, Johnny gave him the Inupiaq name for our late Uncle Job, NuG-Gachaq. He was in his element when one of the kids sought him out to make a sling shot. He was fondly called Uncle Johnny, not only by his nieces and nephews, but acquaintances as well. His vast knowledge of outboard motors, auto mechanics and guns was constantly shared with anyone needing help. He had a keen sense of humor, too. On a berrypicking trip at Bear Creek, as the group returned to the boat, he spotted fresh bear tracks. Without hesitation, he stepped into the tracks and declared "size 9" and kept on walk-

He was a huge basketball fan, but a fan who consistently supported and encouraged the players, and even the coaches. More than that, he was a constant source of encouragement wherever he went and to whomever he met. He enjoyed spider solitaire, cribbage and socializing with his many friends at the XYZ center.

Johnny is survived by his older brother and friend, Clarence Waghiyi of Savoonga; younger sisters, Frances Miller and Carolyn

Saying it Sincerely

By Pastor David Elmore Community United Methodist Church for the Nome Ministerial Association

Text: Matthew 24: 36-44

OK, I know this sounds odd coming from a pastor, but before coming to Nome I had gotten to the point where I just really hated the Christmas Season. And this was in spite of the fact that the Christmas Eve Candlelight Service is my absolute favorite service of the year - both as a layperson and now as a pastor. But Christmas season had gotten so hectic. Going to the mall or other stores to buy presents had become a chore. Parking spaces seemed non-existent. People just seemed ruder — at least when they were driving. And there were all these gifts to buy; and I didn't want to buy anyone a gift unless I could find that gift that would be perfect for the person I was buying for. Most often I would end up settling and just buying them something I knew they would like but wasn't all that special - perfume for mom, pajamas for dad, stuff like that nothing really personal or special. And I'd always be disappointed with myself for not trying harder, or starting to shop earlier, or keeping up relationships better so that I would know just what that special gift should be. I had begun to dread Christmas, or at least what Christmas had be-

It was with this realization that the Christmas season had not always been like this that I began to recover in my heart the spirit of the season of Advent. You see, Advent is a countercultural time of year. When one turns on the radio, watches TV, goes to the store, just about all one hears are Christmas carols. But it seems that the world jumps right into Christmas and forgets about the season of Advent. For Advent is not a time of celebration, but one of preparation. During this time, we as Christians should be preparing ourselves, not just for the remembrance of the coming of Christ some 2,000 years ago but expecting that Christ will come again just as he promised - though as Jesus told us even God does not know when. So this is a time of year where we can truly prepare to celebrate the coming of the risen savior. We do this by dedicating ourselves during this time to growing closer to God. We focus on becoming more aware of the many gifts that God has given us. It is in this time of reflection and time of thanksgiving, that we realize our utter dependence on God. And we don't just turn inward, but we begin looking at the world around us through Jesus' eyes and asking how can we share God's love in this world to those hurting people around us.

How can we prepare ourselves for the coming of Christmas this year? Perhaps we can stop spending money on those frivolous gifts for people we hardly know and give that money instead to help those who are hurting - people whom God created and whom God cares deeply about. And then perhaps we may find the peace for which Christ is called the Prince

Neal Foster Representative, House District 39

Happy holidays, everyone!

Now that the election is done and House leadership has been set for the next legislative session, it's time for me to catch up with you.

What a dramatic few weeks it has been, capped off with Senator Lisa Murkowski's successful and historic write-in campaign and, for me, a chance to serve you better by being given an opportunity to join the House majority.

As I write, the dust has not settled in the election for the U.S. Senate, but Lisa enjoys a lead of 10,328 votes over challenger Joe Miller. Taking away votes his campaign challenged but were counted in her favor during the recent write-in-ballot tally in Juneau, she still is ahead of him by 2,169 votes - a large enough lead to win, according to the Alaska Republican Party, which backed Miller in the general elec-

Rural Alaska deserves a lot of credit for Lisa's victory.

In House District 39 alone, she won 69 percent of 4,446 votes compared with 17 percent for Scott McAdams and 12 percent for Miller. Thanks to strong support here and throughout the state, she will be the first woman in history to be elected to the U.S. Senate as a write-in candidate.

Meanwhile, Miller and his lawyers have succeeded in delaying state certification of the U.S. Senate race by filing a lawsuit that challenges the election and how the state counted write-in ballots, such as allowing minor misspellings of Lisa's name to be considered as votes for her. When a federal judge ruled November 19 that the matter should be handled in state court, Miller took his case to a Fairbanks Superior Court whose judge ruled November 29 that the issue should be heard in Juneau. where the Alaska Division of Elections has its headquarters and stores ballots in a secured area. Time is of the essence because Lisa's new term starts on January 3, 2011.

After the election, the Alaska House organized into majority and minority caucuses. I joined with other rural legislators to be part of a majority coalition that supports having Mike Chenault of Nikiski serve another term as House speaker, Bill tors to come live in the bush and see if they could last more than a month or two on what they expect us to live on. Also, let's see them live with the kind of health care they say is good enough for us.

I hope you all had a great Thanksgiving and that your holidays will be enjoyable. Remember they are only as enjoyable as you make them.

One of the things that disappoint me the most is: I keep stressing about kids driving at too young of an age. Those kids are not supposed to be driving until they are at least 16, especially driving other little kids around. Shame on the parents—my kids would get grounded and extra chores if they did that. Then who are you going to blame when something happens? At least around here they kind of enforce the helmet law. Seems to be (according to some people) that some people seem to get picked on, while others do not. All children under 16 are supposed to get ticketed if they don't use a hel-

Anyway, take care, you all. Have safe holidays by being careful of the ice so that everyone can be happy over the holidays. Yea, good to know you all. Behave.

Thomas of Haines and Bill Stoltze of Chugiak as House Finance co-chairs, Alan Austerman of Kodiak as majority leader, and Craig Johnson as House Rules chair.

I feel honored to have been given the co-chairmanship of the House Special Committee on Energy with Lance Pruitt of Anchorage and membership of the House Resources, the House Community and Regional Affairs, and the House Economic, Trade, and Tourism committees. Through work on House Energy and House Resources, it is my hope that we can make great strides in making energy - including renewable and alternative kinds - more affordable for rural Alaska. As a member of House Economic, Trade, and Tourism, I look forward to working with the panel's chairman, Bob Herron of Bethel, to promote responsible development throughout the state. As a member of House Community and Regional Affairs, I expect to work on a host of rural issues such as ways to reduce high suicide rates that plague the Bush and to address the problems of alcohol abuse. We had a painful reminder over the Thanksgiving holiday of how dangerous the latter can be. There were two deaths where alcohol played a factor, according to Alaska State Troopers. One was in Gambell. The other was in Saint Michael. My heart goes out to the families who lost loved ones. I am resolved to work with others throughout the Bering Strait region and beyond to find ways to restore community wellness. The legislative session begins January 18, 2011.

Have a good, safe and warm holi-

DANGEROUS ROUTE—The map on the right shows the location where the snowmachine carrying Marvin Okleasik and Barbara Scholten went through the ice Nov. 24. Okleasik was able to get atop the ice and walk back to Teller. Scholten was unable to get out of the water and was found five days later by search and rescue crews. The route between Brevig Mission and Teller is well-traveled once ice conditions solidify.

Recovery

able to press on farther out onto the ice. Using the buddy system, the team worked in pairs to try and locate a sweater Okleasik had left on the ice to mark the spot where the snowmachine had gone in. It was that sweater that led searchers to Scholten's body. "She was on top of the ice," Nayokpuk said.

Ice conditions on Grantley Harbor had deteriorated after a warm weather system moved through the region the weekend of Nov. 20 bringing temperatures in the upper 30s and abundant rain. While the route between the two villages is a well-traveled path once the ice conditions allow, Teller resident and search volunteer Diane Miller said she believed the ill-fated trip was the first attempt to make the crossing after the warm weather. "We know there was people going before the rain, and then it softened up," she said.

Diane's husband and Teller search and rescue coordinator Frank Miller said the ice on the harbor at the time appeared to be freshwater ice that was only an inch to an inch and a half thick in some places. "There was no ice underneath, just freshwater [ice] on top," he said Tuesday. Frank Miller said the direct route between Teller and Brevig Mission is approximately seven miles, while he estimated the more circuitous, predominately inland path around the harbor at approximately 10 miles long.

Nayokpuk said the initial search effort started with marking a "safety trail" where snowmachines could safely travel on the ice. He said crews were not able to venture far in the first day or two of the search. "We tried going to where the [accident] scene was, but it was pretty soft," he said. "We were thinking the ice would go out."

As the conditions improved, Nayokpuk said crews were able to walk father out with a long boat for safety. He said holes were drilled in the ice to allow the use of sonar, underwater cameras, hook lines and nets to search for Scholten. He said teams from Shishmaref, where Scholten is originally from, Teller, Brevig Mission and Wales all participated in the search. He estimated having approximately 16 searchers who were split into two teams. No searchers were injured in the recovery effort.

Nayokpuk said it was a relief to find Scholten. "Everybody was happy. We found her, that was the main thing. We got lucky because we found her in five days," he said.

While the crews worked out on the ice, there were more people like Diane Miller behind the scenes dealing with paperwork, ensuring food was ready for crews, and keeping track of donations coming in. She said the Teller Lutheran Church and the Teller School alternated as coordination sites. "We've had so much support from everybody in the Bering Straits," she said. "The school here, the church, the businesses, everyone. We're really grateful for everybody's help."

Diane Miller said the accident has stunned the community. "It was very shocking, when something like this happens real suddenly,"

Nayokpuk was still in Teller on Tuesday, waiting for a plane to be able to take back rescue equipment to Shishmaref. He said teams went through a number of supplies during the search effort and noted that donations are always welcome. He said rubber gloves, liners, warm gloves, hand warmers and other such items are always useful. He also noted having an underwater camera of their own could speed up search efforts if they did not have to wait to obtain one from other sources. Nayokpuk said anyone interested in giving donations of any kind can talk to Shishmaref Emergency Services Coordinators Herbert Brad Nayokpuk or Roy Sockpick at (907) 649-2160.

Handeland said the proposed CFR regulations are about 50 pages long, compared to a half-page of AAC requirements in the city's current ordinance. The whole block of CFR regulations on medical requirements is confusing and tedious, he added. Handeland said if he wants a chauffeur's license, it seems the CFR regulations would require that he obtains one from Washington, D.C.

City Manager Josie Bahnke said the city's attorney just said to replace outdated AAC references with the CFRs.

The council approved a motion by Councilman Jerald Brown to amend the proposed ordinance to require that each taxi undergo inspection to meet vehicle safety standards and ensure that a backup alarm or backup camera is installed prior to receiving a license from the city.

The council also approved a motion by Councilwoman Mary Knodel to delete the following language in the proposed ordinance: "If the city clerk denies the application for a license and the applicant appeals the determination, the city clerk shall issue a temporary license to be in effect until the city clerk's decision is reviewed by the city manager."

Councilman Stan Andersen suggested tabling the proposed ordinance until the council receives a written description of the CFR regulations that would replace the outdated AAC standards. Bahnke said she would look for current AAC regulations to replace the outdated ones. The council voted unanimously to table the proposed ordinance.

Resolutions adopted

The council unanimously approved resolutions to lease space at the Gold Hill Tutit Ininat Child Care Building to Kawerak Inc. for one year for the Head Start Program and for the Uiviilat Play and Learn Center.

Council members also unanimously approved an amendment to Article VII, Section 2 of the bylaws of the Nome Volunteer Fire Department specifying the following requirements for applicants: (1) 18 years or older at the time of application; (2) no longer enrolled in high school; (3) one-year resident of Nome; and (4) submit report of current physical exam (given within one year of application for membership).

Managers' comments

Bahnke reported that she, Andersen and Utility Manager John Handeland had interviewed representatives of three engineering firms that submitted proposals to provide engineering services to the city. She said she hopes to have recommendations for the council to consider at their meeting on Dec. 13.

Handeland said he has begun due diligence work to develop a fuel distribution program as directed by the council, and the city attorney is drafting ordinance amendments to establish a fuel utility. Brown said he personally does not think the city has any business competing with private enterprise. Handeland said he had raised that question with the city attorney, who said municipalities compete with private enterprise all the time.

Community Benefit Share

Mayor Denise Michels announced that Nome will receive $100,000 as a 2010 Community Benefit Share from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. Janice Ivanoff, NSEDC's chief executive officer, outlined decision-making criteria for use of the funds in a letter to Michels dated Nov. 15.

Ivanoff said a public process must be conducted at the municipal level to decide how to use the funds; the Community Benefit Share should go to what the community believes is the highest priority and best use; and the community must report to NSEDC how the funds will be used.

Discussion of Nome's Community Benefit Share was not on the council's meeting agenda, but Scott Henderson asked to comment on use of the funds. Noting that the Community Benefit Share has at times been allocated to swimming pool improvements, he said the funds should be used to benefit the entire community. He mentioned that one year

NSEDC had funded a separate program to pay part of the home heating costs for residents of its member communities.

Manslaughter charged in stabbing death

Accused said she was tired of beatings; kids were at home at time of stabbing

By Tyler Rhodes

A Brevig Mission man is dead and his girlfriend in jail facing charges of manslaughter after a night that appears to have been a tragic mix of cheap whiskey, abuse and a knife.

According to an affidavit filed by Alaska State Troopers, Jessica Olanna, 29, is alleged to have fatally stabbed 35-year-old Andrew Tocktoo in the back of the neck as he talked to their children in the early hours of Nov. 30 in Brevig Mission. In her report, Trooper Anne Sears said Olanna had one of the children call the village health aide and the village police officer after the stabbing. Troopers received report of the death Nov. 30 at approximately 4:15 a.m.

Troopers arrested Olanna Nov. 30 and transported her to the Anvil Mountain Correctional Center in Nome. Sears declined to comment on whether Olanna was cooperative or not during the arrest.

Olanna was arraigned Dec. 1 before Magistrate Bradley Gater on charges of manslaughter and was or-

NEST shelter again readies for the cold

By Tyler Rhodes

While most in Nome likely share her sentiment, Sue Steinacher had a few extra reasons to be happy the temperatures had not plunged into the negative digits by the end of November.

As the president of the newly formed board of directors for the Nome Emergency Shelter Team (NEST), Steinacher and the rest of the team working to provide a cold-weather shelter for Nome were welcoming all the extra time they could get to prepare for this season's coldest weather. "We've been so grateful for this warm weather," Steinacher said Dec. 2.

For the third winter in a row, the emergency shelter will open at the Nome Church of the Nazarene when the temperatures reach -10°F or colder or a windchill of -20°F. As of press time Dec. 6, it appeared that NEST's time for preparation was coming to a close as the weather was set to flip the switch that spurs the shelter into action. A check with the National Weather Service's website during the afternoon of Dec. 6 showed that its thermometer in Nome had reached -9°F between 5 a.m. and 8 a.m. that morning. Temperatures warmed, however, through the night, keeping the shelter from through several changes. The major transforopening just yet. The National Weather Service predicted Tuesday morning that the thermometer would not dip to -10°F or colder for the rest of the week.

When the shelter does open, guests will again find a room full of fold-out mats and boxes filled with bedding supplies. A hot meal will be on the stove and someone will be at the door to greet them as they come in.

While NEST guests should not se nificant difference in the shelter's operation, ment of Housing and Urban Development. The behind the scenes the organization has gone mation that has spurred several smaller shifts in the operation has been NEST's incorporation as a nonprofit entity. "In an effort to become more stable and sustainable, NEST made the decision to incorporate," Steinacher said.

As a nonprofit, NEST now has access to more funding sources to keep the operation alive. The move has already yielded fruit as NEST received a grant that includes funds from the state Mental Health Trust and U.S. Depart-

Nome Common Council mulls sales tax changes

Business owners press council members for clarification on tax laws regarding out-of-town sales

By Laurie McNicholas

The Nome Common Council wrestled with problems in the city's current sales tax ordinance as they reviewed a draft revision of the ordinance at a work session on Dec. 2.

John P. Johns, a certified public accountant who developed the proposed revision under contract with the city, participated in the work session by teleconference.

City Manager Josie Bahnke said several months ago the council directed staff to:

- simplify the language of the
- sales tax ordinance, · strengthen its enforcement capability,
- look at the section on taxing the delivery and services of orders received from out-of-town customers, and

• look at sales tax exemptions for merchandise purchased and subsequently resold and for which sales taxes were paid on the original sale.

"As presented today, the ordinance goes above and beyond," Bahnke said. "There are changes in the tax structure that we did not discuss." The current ordinance specifies a 5 percent sales tax on all retail sales and rentals of goods and services in the city, except as provided in a section titled, "Exceptions." Johns proposed restructuring the tax rate to levy taxes varying from 1 percent to 5 percent on specific categories of sales and services.

Each council member was given a complete copy of the current sales tax ordinance and a copy of the entire revised sales tax ordinance for review. Councilman Stan Andersen said it would be easier for him to review one document showing deletions and additions to the current ordinance. Johns apologized for going bevond the council's direction in revising the ordinance. He said he had looked at a number of sales tax ordinances throughout the state. "Some were thorough and specific to municipalities, and others were generic, so I wanted to put together a base on better practices," he explained. "I do understand this is to be a gradual process, and I have put forth the whole thing because it took me less time with samples before me." He said he would be happy to provide the council with copies of sections on which they wish to focus that show recommended additions and deletions.

Council members directed Johns to do so for their next work session on sales tax ordinance revisions to be scheduled after Jan. 1, 2011. The council focused on four sections of the ordinance at the work session on Dec. 2: (1) "Exemptions," (2) "Sales tax licensing," (3) "Use of information on sales tax returns," and (4) "Situs of taxable transaction."

Dear Nancy,

In the Nov. 25 Nugget, Mitch Erickson of the Nome Chamber of Commerce says: "...we had zero Taiwanese in 2010." I am delighted to prove him wrong. Daisy, Cassie and Lillian (my wife's friends from Taiwan) flew to Nome for Iditarod 2010. They had the time of their life! And word must be spreading. At last count, as many as 12 Taiwanese want to fly out for Iditarod 2011! Looks like we're gonna have to get creative about utilizing floor space! Last July in Anchorage I sat down with former Taiwan Vice President Annette Lu and Alaska Lt. Governor Craig Campbell for a one hour discussion on bilateral relations and trade. When the subject of tourism came up I urged them not to overlook the potential of winter tourism in Alaska: the northern lights, hot springs, dog mushing and, of course, great events like the Iditarod! Dear Editor and everyone around

I would like to let everyone know that it's not right to blame others for what we choose in life. It's up to all of us to make the right choice. Just say no to drugs and alcohol. Drugs and alcohol don't make our problems go away, they just cause more. Please watch yourself and everyone around you and don't get drunk.

We need to pray for the ones we lost, for the ones who are hurt and the ones who make the wrong choice for what they say and do.

I just had a couple cousins lost here in our region. It was real hard to hear what had happen to them.

Reminder: Take care of yourself because that's the only way to live. It's written on the green tee-shirt that NSHC made. Thank you for your time reading this and I hope it helps a lot of people. Sincerely,

Theresa Rock Brevig Mission, AK 99785

Fund Raising, Nome Style

The Nome Volunteer Fire Department knows how to put the fun in fund raising. The annual Firemen's Carnival gets Nomeites out, their wallets open and no one goes home empty handed. The chances to win are overwhelming and we all end up being winners knowing we have contributed to a worthy cause.

The Nome Fire Department is one of many organizations that benefit at the carnival. At least a dozen other Nome non-profits take part in the fun. Essentially all of the money generated comes back into our community. The fire department-sponsored event is a fantastic kick-off for the holiday season with a special reminder to be careful and be alert to fire prevention. The Nome Fire Department will provide free smoke detectors and install them free of charge. Give them a call or ask a firefighter.

Now is the time to run safety checks in our homes and practice what we would do in a fire emergency. Let's do our part to provide a safe, secure home for our families and ourselves. Let's make the coming holidays the best ever. - N.L.M.-

Murkowski explains opposition to earmarks ban

By U.S. Sen. Lisa Murkowski

Last week, the Senate rejected a proposal that would impose a threeyear moratorium on earmarks in both appropriations and authorization bills. Although it failed to pass in this "lame-duck" session - eight Republicans and 48 Democrats voted in opposition — there's little doubt that the issue will resurface once the new Congress convenes in 2011

While I agree on the need to reduce federal spending and improve transparency in the budget process, a ban on earmarks will not reduce the deficit by one cent. And if federal

News from around Alaska

Compiled by Diana Haecker

Parnell sworn in as Governor On Monday, Gov. Sean Parnell was sworn in as Alaska's tenth governor. The inaugural ceremony took place at Centennial Hall in Juneau to the sound of the City of Juneau pipe band and the Thunder Mountain High School Jazz Band. The governor's rural advisor John Moller was Master of Ceremonies. Chief Justice Walter Carpeneti administered the oaths to both Parnell and Lieutenant Governor Mead Treadwell. One-hundred-andtwo year old Dr. Walter Soboleff was present for remarks.

AP reports that Monday's inaugural was low-key, in line with Parnell's wishes, and that scores of seats were empty, as only a handful of legislators were in attendance. Parnell emphasized his focus on family and financial issues and pledged to fight back against overreaching by the federal government.

Sean Parnell was Lt. Gov. to Sarah Palin and stepped into the governor's role after Palin abruptly quit halfway through her term.

Bearded and ringed seals proposed for listing under Endangered Species Act

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration last week proposed to list two icedependent Arctic seals under the Endangered Species Act. The Center for Biological Diversity had petitioned to list the species as endangered due to a warming climate that threatens the sea ice the seals need to survive. Within one year the Ohama administration must finalize last week's decision to list the bearded and ringed seals.

The listing would not affect Alaska Natives' subsistence harvest, which is exempted generally from the Endangered Species Act's NOAA's restrictions. Under decision, all populations of ringed seals would receive Endangered Species Act protection, while only the Pacific subspecies of bearded seals, including those in Alaska and Russia, would receive protection.

In other endangered species proceedings, the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service is under court order

Pebble Mine trial begins

Anchorage (AP)— A trial began Monday in Anchorage over stateissued exploratory permits for the Pebble Mine in southwest Alaska. The lawsuit was brought by eight Bristol Bay village corporations that are trying to stop development of the huge copper and gold deposit near some of the world's most productive wild salmon streams. The coalition argues that permits for Pebble violate the state constitution. It says that the state issued the permits without providing public notice, or any findings on impacts the drilling would have on the area's natural resources.

Lawyers for the state, and the Pebble Partnership representing mining companies Anglo American and Northern Dynasty, say they will show that the harm being alleged from drilling over 1,000 bore holes has not occurred.

ANWR turns 50, igniting disputes

On Dec. 6, the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge celebrated its 50th birthday, but not without igniting discussions of how it should be used. A group of 25 U.S. Senators, 50 house members, businesses and religious organizations as well as environmental groups appealed with letters to President Barack Obama to issue an executive order to grant it national monument status, which would extend greater protection from resource development.

This caused in turn strong reaction from Gov. Sean Parnell, who fired off a letter to the president saying, "The State of Alaska strongly opposes any measures that would further encumber job potential and domestic energy production on the coastal plain of ANWR, the most promising unexplored petroleum region in North America.'

Monument status would not be as strong as wilderness status, but still would block most forms of development.

Last week, refuge advocates including Alaskans from Arctic Village with the Gwich'in Steering Committee gathered in front of the US Capital Building in Washington, D.C. to mark the anniversary and to demonstrate for its protection. The Alaska Congressional delegation and Gov. Parnell continue their fight against Refuge protection efforts.

In 1960 an order was signed to set aside 8.9 million acres in what was then the Arctic National Wildlife Range. When the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act was signed in 1980, the refuge doubled in size, but legislators left the door open to oil exploration on the coastal

Miller still challenges election

Republican Senatorial candidate Joe Miller has still not given up challenging the state's election results that put write-in candidate Lisa Murkowski significantly ahead of him. With Miller's lawsuit in court, the state cannot certify the election, which means that without a declared official winner, Alaska's second Senator's seat remains vacant.

After vocal Miller supporters, including the Republican leadership, have silently withdrawn their support, Democrat Senator Mark Begich last week urged Miller to give it up, already. Begich said that it is time for Joe Miller to put Alaska interests ahead of personal ambition. Without the full Alaska delegation, Begich said, Alaska's interests would be at risk on critical issues from energy development to job creation and reducing the national debt. Miller fired back and said that Begich should 'get back to work and stop wasting time in D.C." Miller said that personal ambition has nothing to do with the legal issues, and that Begich's statement reflects a serious misunderstanding if not a complete ignorance about the election process and the issues involved.

Exemptions from taxation

The "Exemptions" section of the current sales tax ordinance (17.10.030) provides exemptions from sales taxation for transactions in specific categories when the buyer presents a valid exemption certificate and reasonable identification. The exempt categories include a municipality, state or federal government. The section also exempts nonprofit religious, charitable, cemetery, hospital or educational entities when the purchases are used exclusively for nonprofit religious, charitable, cemetery, hospital or educational purposes.

Andersen noted that Nome's large nonprofit entities have numerous exemption certificates distributed among various departments. He expressed concern that some individuals may present an exemption certificate to a merchant for a personal use purchase rather than a purchase used exclusively for the purposes of his/her nonprofit entity.

Councilman Randy Pomeranz said cashiers need to be trained to question whether a person who presents an exception certificate is buying 400 pounds of hamburger for an event sponsored by a nonprofit entity or for his/her home freezer.

Councilman Jerald Brown asked whether the city distributes lists of entities with exemption certificates to merchants. "Some," replied acting City Clerk Camille Ten Eyck.

The city provides tax-exempt sales slip forms to merchants on which exempt sales are listed individually and submitted with sales tax returns. Brown said businesses that computerize such transactions should be allowed to submit an electronic report to the city showing all transactions involving tax-exempt sales on a spreadsheet. Small businesses that don't use a computer to record tax exempt transactions would still need to submit tax exempt sales slips with their returns.

Council members directed Johns to retain the current version of the "Exemptions" section, except for recommending alternatives to the requirement for an exemption certificate and the requirement that merchants submit tax-exempt sales slips with returns.

Sales tax licensing

Johns said there is no single controlling authority in the current sales tax ordinance to deal with a person who does not have a sales tax license and is not paying taxes. He said he has revised section 17.10.060 "Sales tax licensing" so that even if a person has a taxi license, he/she can't drive or do business without a sales tax license. Brown and Councilwoman Mary Knodel told Johns that the revision does not say that. Brown cited the first paragraph of the revision, which reads: "(a) No person may engage in any retail sales transaction as a seller within the city without first procuring an annual sales tax license from the City Clerk." Bahnke said the specific language required will be added.

Brown quoted a previous city clerk as saying that a person who holds more than three garage sales a year should collect and pay sales taxes. He asked how the city should deal with taxing sales at crafts fairs and garage sales.

Johns said other cities have established categories of activities that are taxable and levy taxes at rates that vary by category. That's the reason he included a variable tax rate based on industry classifications in his draft revision of the sales tax ordinance, he explained. Johns suggested expanding the definitions section in the ordinance and making definitions more specific.

Knodel said sellers at craft fairs who have sales tax licenses should collect taxes on their craft fair sales and remit them to the city.

Johns asked whether the owner of a cab company or a driver who leases a taxi from the owner should collect and pay sales taxes on fares. Knodel said the person who leases the cab is to be responsible for the sales tax. Checker Cab owner R. J. Jones and driver Kenny Waltz, who leases a taxi from Jones, provided input to council members during the work session.

Confidentiality provisions

Johns developed a new section for the city's sales tax ordinance titled "Use of information on sales tax returns" (17.10.075) to address confidentiality issues. The proposed section provides that all returns, reports and information filed with the city under the ordinance will be kept confidential. However, the section says the city will release such information to subpoena, order of a court or an administrative agency of competent jurisdiction, and where required by law to do so.

The section specifies that the following information is open to public inspection: (1) The name and address of a person who holds a current city business license; and (2) whether a holder of a city business license is more than 30 days delinquent in filing a return or remitting sale tax, and if so, the number of returns not filed. The section also states: "(d) The city may publish the name of any seller that is delinquent in remitting sales tax, and the delinquent amount thereof. The city also may provide the public with statistical information related to sales tax collections, provided that no information identifiable to a particular seller is disclosed."

Knodel said she has no problem with this new section. The other council members did not comment.

Situs of taxable transaction

Section 17.10.170 of the sales tax ordinance, titled "Situs of Taxable Transaction" deals with taxation of sales outside the city. The current ordinance reads:

"(a) Whenever any element or constituent part of a sale or rental of goods or services occurs in the city, the transaction shall be construed as occurring in the city for tax purposes except as provided in subsection (b) below.

"(b) Sales and rentals of goods and services resulting from orders received from outside the city by mail, telephone or other similar public modes of communications shall not be construed as a taxable transaction if delivery of the goods ordered is made outside the city by mail or common carrier, or if the performance of the services ordered occurs outside the city. Any fractional portion of services performed inside the city shall not be included in this exception, and shall be fully taxable."

Council members want to resolve problems related to subsection (b),

Stabbing

dered held on $50,000 bail. Manslaughter is a class-A felony that ranks below murder in seriousness and has a presumptive sentence of seven to 11 years.

According to Trooper Sears' report, the stabbing was prefaced by a night of drinking and confrontation. She reported the couple had been drinking R&R whiskey that evening and at some point Tocktoo spit on Olanna and possibly head-butted her. The report also states that Tocktoo "boxed" Olanna in the face sometime before the stabbing.

It appears the stabbing may have been retaliatory in nature. "When the health aide, A. Wellert, arrived at the house, Olanna told Wellert she stabbed Tocktoo because she was tired of him beating on her and the kids," the report reads.

The killing occurred while the couple's six children were home. Sears said the children range in ages from 9 months to 11 years old. The report alleges Olanna stabbed Tocktoo in the back of his head with a steak knife as he talked to their children who were in bed at the time.

The report noted one or possibly two wounds at the base of Tocktoo's head located at the back of his neck. Tocktoo was found to have no pulse when the village health aide arrived, according to the report. One of the children reportedly handed the health aide a knife which she put down when she examined Tocktoo. Sears reported finding a five-inch serrated steak knife in the clothes washer.

A breath alcohol test on Olanna read .102 percent at approximately 7:10 a.m. Dec. 30, several hours after Troopers were notified of the incident. A reading of .08 percent is the legal limit for driving in Alaska.

When asked how the state arrived at a manslaughter charge versus murder or another charge, District Attorney John Earthman said Dec. 3 that the charge was based on what little initial information had been gathered in the case at that point. He said as the investigation and case proceed, charges could change. "Where the case will end up, that remains to be seen," he said. "It's tough to know exactly what happened in cases in such a short period of time."

A preliminary hearing for Olanna was scheduled for the afternoon of Dec. 9. She is being represented by the state public defender agency.

Sears expressed gratitude for the help extended to Troopers by residents in Brevig Mission as well as their handling of a difficult situation until Troopers could arrive. "People were extremely helpful," Sears said. She added that the tiny population of the village makes such an incident touch those who respond on a personal level. "This was very tragic. These are folks who they live with, work with, are related to; people they see in the clinic." Sears said.

More details emerge in Thanksgiving deaths

Alaska State Troopers say foul play is not suspected in either case

By Tyler Rhodes

The Alaska State Troopers have released more information regarding the deaths of individuals in St. Michael and Gambell on Thanksgiving Day.

According to Troopers, Amy Slwooko, 23, was found dead outside at approximately noon on Thanksgiving Day. Trooper Anne Sears said Slwooko was found between houses by her brother who had been with her the night before. Sears said Slwooko was found not too far from where she had been the previous evening.

Sears said alcohol appears to be a factor in the case, but that toxicology tests are pending. She said there is no foul play suspected in the death. Troopers are still waiting to hear back from the medical examiner for a cause of death.

In a separate case, Troopers say a 43-year-old man in St. Michael was found dead by hanging on Thanksgiving Day. As of press time, Troopers had not released the name of the man or given any further information. An earlier response by Troopers said no foul play was suspected in the man's death.

but they flatly rejected Johns' proposed revision, which reads:

"(b) For rock, sand, gravel, minerals or precious metals extracted and refined or otherwise processed at the place of extraction, the sale of the materials extracted are presumed to have occurred within the City of Nome if the extraction of such materials occurred within a 15 miles radius of the geographic center of the City of Nome."

"If it's in a 15-mile radius, annex it or do not tax it," Knodel said.

"Severance taxes are reserved to boroughs, not cities," Brown added. Johns suggested that the city attorney look at his revision of subsection (b), but Brown and Andersen told him to delete it. "OK," Johns replied.

Brown, who is employed by Bering Straits Native Corp., explained why he believes the "Situs of taxable transaction" section needs substantial revision. "Because I sit at "If you look at the ordinance, you get different answers each time."

- Scott Henderson, Bonanza Fuel

a desk in city limits and oversee operations outside city limits, all activities are subject to sales tax, and strictly interpreted, that's true," he said. "We spent tens of thousands on legal fees, and the city dropped it, but the code is still there." Brown said BSNC had $190 million in sales outside Nome last year.

"If you look at the ordinance, you get different answers each time," Scott Henderson told the council. "Either charge a sales tax outside or not." He said the city has told Bonanza Fuel if it has a delivery to Dexter, which is outside of Nome's city limits, it will be required to collect sales tax and remit it to the city. He said the ordinance is obscure, but the city makes Bonanza Fuel comply with it.

Bahnke suggested that the term "common carrier" be defined in the ordinance. Andersen suggested adding four or five examples.

Johns said he has talked with Henderson and agrees with him. The sales tax code should be simple, fair and based on whether an entity benefits from municipal services, he added. Johns said NovaGold's currently inactive mining operation located eight miles outside the city poses potential threats to the Nome's estuaries and water sources and may use city services to handle emergencies such as accidents.

Andersen said that's a philosophical topic.

Johns insisted that the city has broad discretion in deciding what to tax and not to tax outside town. "To the extent you can capture revenue out of town, you can reduce [sales taxes] in town," he added.

"Don't select one business and target that and not others," Henderson said. He asked if gravel deliveries, plumbing work and taxi service outside town are taxed. "Make it consistent and fair," he urged.

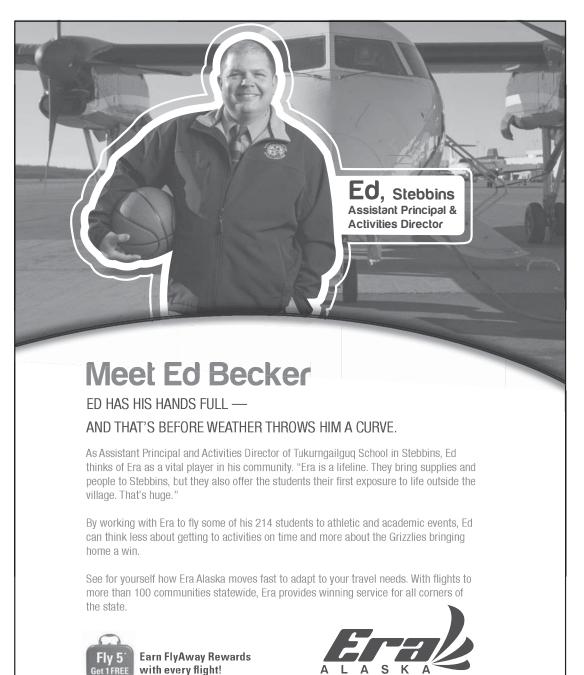

All council members except mayor Denise Michels attended the work session.

Golovin claims fourth consecutive mixed-6 title

Lynx and Unalakleet Wolfpack heading to state Championships come from dedication, perseverance and the ability to overcome obstacles. The Golovin Lynx Mixed-6 volleyball team earned its fourth consecutive Western Conference championship this week using all three.

Two weeks ago the Lynx had fallen in two matches to their rival, the Unalakleet Wolfpack. Twice in the championship match on Saturday they fell behind the same team again, but each time they rose to the challenge and swept the host Wolfpack to again advance to the state tournament.

The three-day tournament featured teams from 10 Bering Strait School District villages. All were intent on acquiring one of the two state berths, and all arrived with some realistic chance of doing so. The district has never seen such parity and quality play from top to bottom as was displayed this season. With the wind howling and weather closing in, all made it in time to get started Dec. 2.

The early-round matches showed the seed process was correct as the top four seeds advanced to the semifinals. The top seeded host team from Unalakleet rode the amazing attack game of sophomore Stuart Towarak and outstanding defensive play to defeat a game White Mountain squad to take the first slot in the championship game.

Golovin re-asserted themselves after slipping in the rankings late in the season with a victory over the Brevig Mission Huskies. Senior hitter Robert "Bam" Moses Jr. led the assault that led the Lynx to the second slot in the championship face-off.

The championship match was a three-game sweep for the defending champion Lynx, but each set was extremely close, and the Wolfpack had many opportunities to extend, or even win, the match. On the loser's side, the Shishmaref Northern Lights were carried on the back by the notvery-tall, but very gifted senior Miizuk Nayokpuk who put his premier back-row hitting and serving on show for the appreciative audience. Shishmaref avenged an earlier-round loss to the White Mountain Wolves to earn a spot in the "true second" game against the Wolfpack. Unalakleet took advantage of Shishmaref's tired legs to take the second place trophy and also a berth at the state tournament.

Tree lights marks holiday season's start in Unalakleet

By Jeffrey Erickson

The stars twinkled, the hot cocoa warmed, the church bell pealed and the lights went on. Unalakleet welcomed the start of the Christmas season with its annual Tree Lighting Ceremony Dec. 5.

A large group gathered to enjoy a wonderful ceremony organized by Vice-Mayor Leona Grishkowsky. With a couple of beautiful solos by Kira Eckenweiler and Kristen Mashiana, a delightful set by a group of cherubs in red bows and a stirring trumpet solo by Tim Wolcott, everyone enjoyed the music and festivities. Completing the evening was a comforting old Inupiaq song, "Christmas Time is Here Again," and a group carol sung around the brightly lighted tree. The tree will stay up throughout the season bringing holiday cheer to all who pass by.

ADF&G acknowledges climate change, calls for more research and adaptive policies

By Diana Haecker

Last week the Alaska Department of Fish and Game issued a 19-page paper that formally acknowledges that climate change is a reality that is changing Alaska and the Arctic at unprecedented rates.

After then-governor Sarah Palin installed a Subcabinet on Climate Change in 2007, ADF&G is the first department to release its studies as a formal response with recommendations to the Alaskan public. The document starts out saying that warming temperatures, changing precipitation patterns, altered stream flows, loss of sea ice, increased wildfires and thawing permafrost would affect fishing and hunting.

The paper paints a picture of the interconnectedness of ecosystems and their link to the climate. Scientists have identified that the state's water bodies may change as permafrost melts, wetlands drain and rivers change their courses. Another concern is that more wildfires are expected, which could benefit moose but hurt species like woodpeckers that rely on old growth forests.

Altered sea ice conditions could change the distribution of seal species, and this affects subsistence users. And as ocean acidity increases, marine food webs may be altered, potentially affecting commercially harvested fish, shellfish and other species. The whole web of ecosystems change due to the warming trend and this, ADF&G's paper says, will require human responses, such as how to deal with invasive species that could potentially crowd out native species or how habitat changes. "The challenge for environmental and resource management agencies will be to manage for healthy, productive ecosystems in a future made less certain due to a changing climate," reads the document.

The paper also warns that while "clean" energy alternatives are developed to lessen Alaska's carbon footprint, those resources could also impact species, i.e. birds caught in wind turbines.

As climate changes, things become more unpredictable and whole ecosystems can change faster than agencies can prepare for. The ADF&G authors recommended a strategy to deal with a warming world that would identify observed, likely and potential effects of climate change on fish and wildlife and their habitats. They suggest to assess the vulnerabilities of species and to conduct more adaptive research.

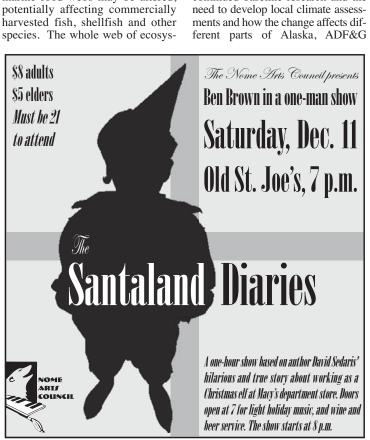

The authors wrote that "since the potential for controversy associated with climate change could be high", the department also stresses education and increased public outreach. Beside continued baseline research and the need to develop local climate assessments and how the change affects different parts of Alaska, ADF&G suggest to bring climate change considerations into management plans of species and to address statutory changes at federal, state and local levels.

A key action is to fill information gaps on Alaska's species of great concern to avoid listings that would put them in endangered status. Another immediately doable action is to establish partnerships with federal agencies like Alaska Climate Change Executive Round Table, U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the U.S. Geological Survey and the Alaska Climate Science Center, the North Pacific Research Board and North Slope Science Initiative. This is a departure from the state's tone that continually asserts the state's sovereignty in fighting federal agencies for restrictive measures like Endangered Species Listings.

In another recommendation, the paper says, "The challenge for governmental leaders and businesses is to adapt to a future made less certain due to a more rapidly changing climate. This will necessitate an evaluation of existing laws, regulations and policies and possible changes to institutional, legal and policy frameworks in an adaptive manner."

Plantar fasciitis: How to heal the heel

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Plantar fasciitis (pronounced planter fash-ee-ahy-tis) is a common cause of foot pain typically localized to the bottom of the foot near the heel. It is often associated with a sudden increase in activity or a change in footwear, like switching to flat-footed winter boots.

The pain from plantar fasciitis is often worse in the morn-Many ing. people scribe a sharp pain under the heel occurring with the first few steps of the day. The pain usually improves with activity or stretching.

Without proper treatment the problem can become a chronic annoying pain that prevents healthy levels of activity, or at least takes away any fun associated with being active. However, if the problem is recognized early, treatment can result in rapid recovery.

The plantar fascia is a thick semielastic band of tissue that extends from the bottom of the heel to the ball of the foot. You can feel this band if you press a finger into the arch of your foot and then fully extend your toes. With each step the plantar fascia acts like a shock absorber that protects the arch of the foot from becoming too flat.

The pain of plantar fasciitis results from a sudden overstretching of the fibers of the plantar fascia. This sudden stretching causes micro tears in the fibers that attach the fascia to the base of the heel leading to inflammation and pain. If the problem is allowed to persist for a long time a small extension of bone will develop off the tip of the heel forming a sharp spur seen on X-ray. The "heel spur' is not the cause of pain, only a sign that the problem may have been present for a long time.

There are many possible causes of damage to the planfascia: switching to shoes that have poor arch support; increasing activities like stair or hill climbing; sitting for long periods with the feet extended; standing on the toes for long periods as when working on a ladder or riding some types of snowmachines, or regularly wearing shoes with high heels that cause a contraction of the Achilles

Treatment for plantar fasciitis is straightforward. In fact, there are many things a person can do before going to the doctor for help.

First, stretch the plantar fascia on both feet, even if only one side is hurting. Proper stretching is performed by leaning with arms outstretched against a wall with one leg extended behind you, taking care to ensure the toes of both feet are pointed forward and both heels are lowered to the floor. If this maneuver is difficult, the fascia may be stretched by looping a towel or elastic band around the ball of the foot and then pulling upward toward the knee. In general, any stretch that stretches the calf or Achilles tendon will also stretch the plantar fascia.

Second, use ice over the affected area for 15 minutes at a time. This is best performed at the end of the day to reduce any inflammation. Some people find a frozen water bottle rolled under the foot makes a handy tool for both stretching and icing the plantar fascia.

Third, consider using a night splint. Most people sleep with their toes pointed downward. This leaves the plantar fascia in a shortened position for hours, which explains why the first few steps of the day can be the most painful. Night splints designed to keep toes pointed up during sleep can be purchased online or in some cases be specially made by your provider. These splints keep the fascia stretched during the night so that waking pain is reduced.

Fourth, ensure your shoes have proper arch support or use orthotics that more evenly distribute pressure

Fifth, consider modifying your activity to allow time for the plantar fascia to heel. This could mean switching physical activities. Runners may choose to swim or ride a bike for a few weeks.

If these measures fail to address heel pain, see your doctor to ensure the diagnoses is correct and rehabilitation maneuvers are being performed properly. An X-ray may be ordered to rule out other causes of foot pain. Your provider can also discuss further treatment options including physical therapy or corticosteroid injection.

Drifting tank vessel pulled by Shell icebreaker

A 738-foot tanker Golden Seas lost its turbo power on Friday last week near Adak in the Aleutian Islands and didn't manage to counter swells in the Bering Sea. The tanker was transporting a cargo of canola seeds from Canada to the United Arab Emirates and reportedly had 11 million gallons of diesel fuel and 5.5 million gallons of bunker fuel on

On Saturday, the disabled vessel was pulled by a Shell icebreaker, Tor Viking with a plan to take it to Captions Bay near Unalaska. The meaning of holiday symbols

By Dale O'Neal

The sights and sounds of Christmas are all around us. Store windows with displays, neighborhoods with lights, and decorated trees in the living room.

As we decorate our homes and businesses, be sure to appreciate the meanings of the symbols of Christmas. These symbols originated hundreds of years ago, when families would gather in quiet solitude to decorate simple farm homes. These symbols originated during times when decorations were rare, and often required a financial sacrifice for the family.

The Tree: Most researchers agree that the modern Christmas tree is a symbol of the new life that springs froth from the root of Jesse. Jesse was the father of King David. The Messiah was promised from the line of King David. Jesus was a direct descendant of King David, and His life is symbolized as the "new life" that sprouts from the tree. Jesse and David are the roots. Christ

The Christmas Cane: Shaped like a Shepherd's cane, for Jesus said that He was "the good Shepherd." The color red in the cane symbolizes the blood of Jesus that was shed on the cross for all of humanity. The white symbolizes the purity of Jesus' life on this earth —a perfect, sinless life. The canes that are made of candy remind us that Jesus said that we are to eat of his flesh.

The Wreath: In the Book of Revelation, Jesus is described as The Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end. The circular wreath has no beginning, and no end. His Kingdom knows no beginning and no end. The green of the wreath reminds us the Jesus is eternal, springing forth a new life, a new Christmas Lights: Jesus is the Light of the World. (John 8:12) A great Light has come into the world.

Christmas Gifts: Christmas gifts are symbolic for two reasons. First, they remind us that the wise men brought gifts to the baby Jesus. Those gifts were chosen to be gifts for a king, gifts for a priest, and gifts for a funeral. Jesus was both king and priest, and He gave His life for us. Second, the gifts remind us of the eternal gift that we have if we accept Jesus Christ as Lord and Savior, and recognize him as the Son of God. The gift of eternal life, dwelling with God the Father and with Jesus the Son for eternity in heaven, if we accept Jesus and trust in him alone.

The Holly: Symbolic of the crown of thorns that Jesus wore as he voluntarily submitted himself to trial and crucifixion.

The Star: Usually placed on the top of the tree, the star reminds us that Jesus' birth was announced by the appearance of a star. That star led the wise men to Bethlehem, the birthplace of Jesus. Bethlehem was the fulfillment of an Old Testament prediction concerning the birth of the Messiah. (Micah 5). Angels: God used angels to proclaim the birth of Jesus.

The Nativity: The nativity scene reminds us of the lowly entry of Jesus into our world. He left heaven to redeem us for eternity. The lowly nature of his entry reminds us that, "He who is last shall be first."

The quality of care afforded Johnny Johnson during his final hospitalization at Norton Sound Health Corporation cannot be overstated. Dr. Liu especially must be commented for her willingness to apprise family of Johnny's condition; as well as maintaining constant contact with Johnny's cardiologist throughout his final ordeal.

Throughout his hospitalization, the nurses and staff responded and provided top quality nursing care to him for which Johnny's surviving family members are extremely grateful. Please accept our heartfelt thanks

Family and extended family and friends, as well as Pastor Harvey Fiskeaux, and Chuck Fagerstrom, remained at Johnny's bedside until he went to be with out Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

The outpouring of support, love, thought, flowers and food was tremendous! Johnny touched so many lives that both individuals and organizations came together on his behalf, extending offers of help in any way we might need. Somehow, our thanks seem inadequate. Among them were:

Chuck and Peggy Fagerstrom Maggie Olson Jeff Sutton Robert Dunbar Wiley and Kitty Scott Tom and B.J. Gray Leonard Sarja Helen Simon Karl Ashenfelter Tula Mae and Ron Hoffman Karen Waghiyi Lola Sheldon Boogles Johnson

Many more people and organizations phoned us, sent cards, or came to Johnny's services-and for that we thank you. Thanks for all the food, sharing of memories, and support. Johnny's typical response would have been, "Good show!" Johnny will be missed at all basketball games, bugging the weather service personnel and just being here. Think of him when you hear sunrise and sunset info-or when the weather report is announced on the radio. That will, for just a moment, keep him closer to all of us.

spending transparency and accountability are the goals, there are steps that we can take to improve in these areas without handing over the reins of the budget process to the Administration and unelected bureaucrats in Washington.

By banning earmarks, we would be leaving the development of the federal budget to the executive branch, and interest groups would pursue their projects behind the closed doors of federal agencies and the White House and without the sunlight that the congressional process affords. Communities from Bethel, Alaska to Des Moines, Iowa to New York City would have to make their case to Administration officials as to why their project is worthy, and it would be up to the Administration alone to pick the winners and losers. It is a cynical view, but it is not difficult to imagine a scenario in which states with key primaries or a large number of electoral votes find a more receptive audience than those without the added allure.

But the earmark ban amendment that was considered last week would go far beyond simply addressing Appropriations Committee issues. It could also affect legislation that authorizes federal spending. There are literally hundreds of bills that are written to deal with problems in a state or region that must include language to authorize discretionary spending. Under the amendment, these bills could not be considered unless requested by the Administration. For example, Congress could be prohibited from requiring that any percentage of federal offshore oil and gas revenues be shared with the State of Alaska. Furthermore, legislation providing critical federal loan guarantees for an Alaska natural gas pipeline could also be prohibited by this earmark ban.

From my role atop the Energy and Natural Resources Committee panel and as an appropriator, I look at this and ask, "What does this mean for our ability to provide oversight of the National Park Service, the Minerals Management Service, or the U.S. Forest Service?" If we have an Administration or agency that is intent on locking up tracts of land in the Tongass from development, how do we ensure that money is spent to prepare timber sales and to build roads necessary to harvest timber? How do we ensure that the federal government conducts lease sales for oil and gas and mineral development on federal lands and on the outer continental shelf if we make the threat of congressional direction an empty

Our system of government is built upon the idea of checks and balances. If the Congress were to ban earmarks, we would be shirking our responsibility to oversee the actions of the federal agencies and handing to unelected bureaucrats the power of the purse, which is vested in Congress by the Constitution.

There is no question that we need to cut runaway federal spending. This is reflected in my voting record. But once the budget top line number is set, I will not shy away from making sure that the people I represent have their voices heard. Alaska is a young state lacking in basic infrastructure and, as such, its needs are great. The Alaska delega-

Snow, cold and ice come all at once

By Tyler Rhodes

If Nomeites were wondering when winter was going to hit in full, last week's weather ended any guessing.

In a matter of days, the area saw the sea ice arrive, a school-closing blizzard descend and the season's first sub-zero temperatures.

The appearance of large white blocks of ice along Nome's beaches midway through last week set the stage for high winds and snow Thursday and Friday that shut down schools and sent shovelers and plow operators to work. Typical of a Nome snowstorm, the winds blew some areas clear while creating drifts several feet deep in others.

Just as Nome dug out from the snow, residents were also digging out their warmer coats as the mercury marked the first subzero temperatures of the year early Sunday morning. At 9:45 a.m. Dec. 5 the temperature went south of 0°F for the first time since April 9. The chilly event came a little later than normal this year as the average date for Nome's foray into subzero weather is Nov. 15, according to the National Weather Service. The earliest first day below 0°F was Oct. 12, 1996, and the latest arrival was Dec. 17, 1912.

By Monday morning this week, temperatures reached -9°F before making an upward swing. The National Weather Service predicted Tuesday that temperatures would gradually climb throughout the week with nighttime lows staying on the above-zero side of the thermometer after Tuesday night.

NEST

money, which is administered through the Alaska Housing and Finance Corp., has allowed the organization to hire monitors and directors to help relieve the workload of volunteers who were facing burnout after staffing and organizing the shelter for 67 nights last winter. "It was an exhausting process. The thought was we didn't want to lose all volunteers," Steinacher said. "There was a hardcore group that would be called sometimes three times a week to pull a shift and still have to go to work at 8 o'clock in the morning."

While NEST will still depend on volunteers to staff monitor shifts when the shelter opens on weekends, the newly hired monitors will run the shelter when cold weather prompts its opening on weeknights. The shelter will operate on a slightly expanded schedule this year, opening at 9:15 p.m. and closing at 9 a.m. For those working at the shelter, the night will again be split into two shifts, the first from 9 p.m. to 3:15 a.m. and the second from 3 a.m. to 9 a.m.

In addition to the hired monitors, Bonnie Hahn will return as a parttime seasonal shelter manager and Bryant Hammond has been brought on board as a part-time seasonal director. Steinacher said the grant funds should be able to cover salaries for the paid shift workers, the manager position and the reimbursement of heating costs for the Nazarene church. At this point, Steinacher said she was not sure the organization could secure enough funding to look toward purchasing a facility solely dedicated to NEST. "There just may not be enough money in this community," she said.

The intense amount of volunteer effort it took to keep the shelter up and running the last two years has worked as both a threat and a benefit to the organization. The countless hours donated by volunteers threatened to bring the operation to a halt out of sheer fatigue. But at the same time, that dedication and continual show of community support helped NEST in its efforts attract attention from potential funding sources. "Nome and NEST, and the level of volunteerism here, were really noticed within the homeless coalitions within the state,"

Steinacher said. "People were really impressed with what Nome pulled off in the last two years."

Steinacher said an even broader support group for NEST will be needed as the organization seeks future funding. She said NEST is reapplying for the grant through the Alaska Housing and Finance Corp., but will be going up against double the applicants who sought funding in the last go-around. "One thing we really need to do in Nome that will help us score higher in grants is to form a coalition that will come up with a plan on how Nome wants to address homelessness," she said.

While much talked about and studied, Nome currently has no treatment center or long-term shelter to help people address the issues that often factor into them ending up on the street. "Communities across the state are addressing these homeless plans. It's really tough in Nome because we don't really have services to refer them to to help move them out of homelessness," Steinacher said. "The shelter is a Band-Aid, it's a Band-Aid to keep people alive in extreme weather conditions."

While NEST may be a stop-gap measure to treat a much larger problem, it is now at least on a more formal footing. NEST's incorporation has given the organization the ability and necessity to acquire liability insurance. NEST initially sprang into action as the result of a few volunteers working outside of any formal organization to simply provide a warm space for people to sleep when temperatures dropped to dangerously cold levels. Part of NEST's ability to quickly form and work was that lack of a hierarchy or bureaucracy.

But the looseness of the organization eventually put the majority of the burden of keeping the operation afloat on the shoulders of just a handful of people. And there was always the lingering fear of some sort of accident or incident that could spur questions over liability. A sustained effort requires a stable foundation, and a formal incorporation, board of directors and a nonprofit status were all seen as necessary steps for the organization's survival. "We've been very fortunate that we have had no negative instances of any sort, but we've been operating without a safety net for the past couple of years," Steinacher said.

Along with the safety net also come requirements. For NEST to be insured, it now needs to conduct background checks on its volunteers who will work as shelter monitors. Steinacher said the checks will only be looking to make sure volunteers do not have a history of violent of sexual criminal activity. Past offenses such as driving under the influence will not bar someone from volunteering, she said. "This is not a lack of trust on NEST or the church's part. We are required to do this to provide ourselves a safety net through insurance," she said.

Who's onboard, how to help

In addition to Steinacher, other board NEST members are Julie Yoder Elmore (secretary/treasurer), Greg Smith, Sandy Martinson, Abby Huggins and Jacob Carl. The organization currently does not have a vice president.

Those who are interested in helping with the shelter, whether it is through volunteering to work a weekend shift or making a donation, should contact Hahn at (907) 443-2733 or Hammond at (907) 434-1828.

Brevig Mission woman indicted for murder

By Tyler Rhodes

A Brevig Mission woman accused of killing her boyfriend was indicted by a grand jury Dec. 10 on counts of murder I, murder II and manslaughter.

Jessica Olanna, 29, had pleas of not guilty to all charges entered on her behalf by attorney Angela Greene who participated in the hearing by telephone. A trial is scheduled for Feb. 15.

The charges stem from the stabbing death of Olanna's boyfriend, Andrew Tocktoo, in the early hours of Nov. 30. According to an Alaska State Troopers' report, the 35-year-old father of Olanna's children was stabbed in the back of his neck near the lower portion of his head. The report said Tocktoo was stabbed while talking to his children who were in bed.

The Trooper report also detailed Olanna's alleged statements to a health aide that she stabbed Tocktoo because she was tired of him beating on her and the kids. Olanna reported being spit upon, having her face "boxed," and possibly being headbutted by Tocktoo during the evening that preceded the fatal stabbing. Both Tocktoo and Olanna had allegedly been drinking R&R whiskey that night.

The foreman of the grand jury, which met earlier in the day Dec. 10, presented Superior Court Judge Ben Esch its finding of a true bill against Olanna. The foreman said the jury heard only one case that day and heard from nine witnesses.

The sentencing range for a person convicted of first-degree murder ranges from 20 to 99 years. A conviction of second-degree murder can carry a 10- to 99-year sentence. Manslaughter, a Class A felony, can carry a sentence of up to 20 years.

Olanna was not in court as the indictment was read. The next scheduled court date in the case is an omnibus hearing slated for Jan. 14.

City to make the switch to LED street lamps

By Laurie McNicholas

Utility Manager John Handeland persuaded the Nome Common Council to spend $100,000 from Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. to help replace all of the city's street lights with LEDs (lightemitting diodes).

LEDs are much more energy-efficient than incandescent lights. Handeland proposed the project during a public hearing to decide how to use the 2010 Community Benefit Share funds the city will receive from NSEDC the city will receive from NSEDC. "You pay $50,000 a year to operate 250 street lights," Handeland noted.

He estimated that the city would save $30,000 a year when all of Nome's street lights have been replaced by LEDs. He said it would take $150,000 to replace each of them at a cost of $600 each. "The utility could replace them as time permits," Handeland added. "It will take several weeks."

"Do LED bulbs last longer?" asked Councilman Jerald Brown.

"They do," Handeland replied. He said a street light bulb lasts two years, while an LED will last five or six years.

Councilman Stan Andersen questioned whether the light output from LEDs will be as bright as the current street lights. Handeland said the utility has installed doubly bright LEDs in front of Norton Sound Regional Hospital, at Fifth and K by Nome Elementary School and by the Nome Preschool. However, he said the city will not save as much if such bright LEDs are used for all street lights.

Handeland said the city can operate three LED lights for the same energy cost as one of the current lights, so if an LED does not produce enough light, the city could add an arm for another LED and still some money.

other LED and still save money.

Councilwoman Mary Knodel made a motion to replace all of the city's street lights with LEDs. Brown noted that $100,000 would replace about two-thirds of them. City Manager Josie Bahnke said the city has about $150,000 in an energy fund, but the idea is to use it to replace windows. Andersen said the council may find the remainder of funds needed to replace all street lights with LEDs while adjusting the city's budget in January.

"I can order the first ones now and the dealer will honor the price, and then I'll get an accurate count," Handeland said. "The utility already bought and

I thought we were going to teach our children the Native remedies. As a lot of you know-I will attest to using stinkweed for colds and other ailments. I often tell folks I'm willing to make and bring them some. Stinkweed grows naturally, so it's free, and it is good for a few different things. You can boil water and let the stinkweed steep in the water, then drink it. You could take the wet leaves and put them on an area that hurts for about 15 to 20 minutes and it should take away some of the pain for a while, and it will draw the pus up to the top of the skin and all one has to do is wrap a damp piece of stinkweed around it. And the darn stuff is free, how about that?

We are very fortunate on this God's green earth to have what we do. We are supposed to be thankful Wealth Care Passes Pity the poor millionaires and billionaires who just had to have a tax cut. Let's see if we can squeeze out a tear or two. Stop and think about those Bush tax cuts. They were done in a time when we had a balanced budget, no wars and money was good. The government could afford to cut taxes. But wait, something happened. The economy turned sour and the pre-tax cut revenue is needed. Why not go back to the tax rate we had before the Bush cuts? Were we complaining then? The economy was in good shape (and the Democrats were in

It's so hard to understand why Congress is so against the middle and lower classes. Now there is talk of a federal sales tax. Holy mackerel! The folks who barely get by will have to pay just as much tax on their hamburger and fries as the millionaires. Do millionaires even eat burgers? Do the stretch limos line up at the take out window? Congress is getting into the holiday spirit. Sen. Lisa Murkowski explained why she voted against extending unemployment. Her convoluted explanation made about as much sense as the Red queen in Alice in Wonderland. Talk about holiday spirit - Scrooge is alive and well and a member of Congress. Wealth Care! Bah, humbug! Tax the billionaires till they feel the pinch as much as the rest of us feel it.

I don't know which is the bigger shame-having to pay what we pay for some of the things at our local stores, or just because they could, pay for added shipping and handling costs that Wal-Mart or Fred Meyers charges just to have their people put one to 10 items (in different boxes mind you) so that you wonder if it is even worth the ordering. They sent me five items-of which at most should have cost $100. They sent them in three different boxes and it cost me over $70 more.

Miller takes suit to Alaska Supreme Court

While the time nears that new and re-elected U.S. Senators are to be sworn in on January 5, the Joe Miller campaign took their lawsuit to the Alaska Supreme Court on Monday, challenging the way the state handled the November election. On Friday, a lower court ruled in favor of the state and Lisa Murkowski, who intervened on behalf of the state in the court proceedings. On Monday. Miller filed an appeal of the ruling in the higher court. The Miller campaign still insists on a hand count. Arguments are set to be heard on Friday. Lieutenant Governor Mead Treadwell, for the first time speaking as Lt. Governor and taking over the battle from predecessor Craig Campbell, said that he was pleased with Friday's ruling and that the most important decision was made by the voters on November 2.

Miller challenges the way the state interprets the law when it comes to write-in ballots. The state allowed minor misspellings of candidate's names and interpreted that voter intent trumps correct spelling.

Lisa Murkowski waged a write-in campaign after losing to Miller in the primaries and managed to get more than 10,000 votes ahead of Miller in the November election. Almost 8,000 of these votes were challenged by Miller election observers. In the meantime, the certification of the election has been halted until the issues are resolved.

Pilot error caused C-17 crash, report finds

A report on the cause of the military C-17 plane crash at the Joint Air Force Base Elmendorf and Richardson this summer said that the pilot violated regulations and flight manual procedures and thus put the plane on an attitude and altitude from which it couldn't recover. The report does not identify which of the three pilots was in control of the airplane when it crashed. The plane crash occurred when the pilot tried a sharp right turn after the plane's initial take-off and left turn. Although the stall-warning system sounded, the pilot continued the turn and stalled. The C-17 crashed into the forest about a minute after taking off. The persons killed were Maj. Michael Freyholtz, 34, of Hines, Minn.; Maj. Aaron Malone, 36, of Anchorage; Capt. Jeffrey Hill, 31, of York, Pa., and Master Sgt. Thomas Cicardo, 47, of Anchorage. Cicardo was posthumously promoted to senior master sergeant. The plane crash also damaged a section of the Alaska Railroad's main track.

Governor keeps key staff

Governor Sean Parnell last week continued to appoint commissioners and staff to his administration. Parnell said he will retain Mike Nizich as his chief of staff and John Katz as the director of state and federal relations and special counsel to the governor in Washington, D.C. Nizich has worked for the office of the Governor since Gov. Bill Sheffield was in office. Since then he has served seven other governors as the director of administrative services through the Tony Knowles administration and was appointed deputy chief of staff by Gov. Frank Murkowski. Exgovernor Sarah Palin made him chief of staff.

John Katz also goes back to the administration of Jay Hammond and he also served under eight governors, including as commissioner of DNR and then counsel to the governor in Washington. Parnell retained deputy chief of Staff Randy Ruaro; Cindy Sims, who is deputy chief of staff for Office of the Governor operations and also international trade director; Office of Management and Budget Director Karen Rehfeld; Legislative Director Heather Brakes: and Senior Advisor for Rural Affairs John Moller. Duane Mayes was named to lead the Division of Senior & Disabilities Services and the Alaska Department of Health and Social Services. Mayes begins his new position on December 20, 2010.

Alaska Energy Authority seeks new executive director

Without much fanfare, Steven Haagenson left his post as the executive director of the Alaska Energy Authority in October. Karsten Rodvik, spokesman for AEA said that Haagenson had come out of retirement in 2008 to head the state's energy authority and to help formulate a state energy policy. Rodvik said that once that mission was accomplished, Haagenson wanted to be back in Fairbanks with his family. AEA now is searching for a new executive director, who will be responsible for leading all business and operations of the public corporation of the state with the mission to reduce the cost of energy in Alaska.

Pebble opponents labeled "terrorists"

AP- A group of Alaskans fighting the state over permits for the Pebble Mine wants an apology because they say the person representing mining companies accused them of "legal terrorism." Nunamta Aulukestai, a coalition of nine Bristol Bay Native corporations, said Thursday that John Shively, the head of the Pebble Partnership - the limited partnership representing Anglo American and Northern Dynasty Minerals - insulted them. Shively said he did not mean to indicate that any individual was a terrorist. He said his words were directed at Trustees for Alaska, the law firm representing Nunamta Aulukestai.

The village corporations argue that exploratory permits for the huge copper and gold deposit in southwest Alaska, near some of the world's most productive wild salmon streams, violate the state constitution because they were issued without providing public notice, or any findings on impacts the drilling would have on natural resources. A Superior Court judge determined the constitutional issues should be heard. The trial began last week in Anchorage. In his speech to the Resource Development Council on Nov. 18, Shively brought up the lawsuit and accused Trustees of Alaska of finding "a few disgruntled people" to help them engage in what he described as "legal terrorism."

Nunamta Aulukestai's executive director, Kim Williams, said the Pebble Partnership decided to become a party to the lawsuit alongside the state and has been taking full advantage of America's legal system. "For them to take it to this extreme level of terrorism and to use this word 'terrorism,' that makes it really objectionable," she said.

Council updates medical requirements for commercial drivers

By Laurie McNicholas

The Nome Common Council amended a proposed ordinance to replace outdated Alaska Administrative Code standards for medical certification for drivers of commercial motor vehicles with requirements from the Code of Federal Regulations at a meeting on Monday.

The action came in response to criticism of the CFR medical requirements as presented to the council in the proposed ordinance on Nov. 22. John Handeland said the regulations were too long, confusing and tedious. The council asked City Manager Josie Bahnke to provide them with copies of the proposed CFR requirements and to suggest alternatives.

On Monday the council amended the ordinance to include a much shorter and clearer portion of the CFR, and then unanimously approved it.

The new ordinance amends subsection 3.10.025(5) of the Nome Code of Ordinances to read: "(5) The applicant must possess a medical certificate completed within three months of application establishing that the applicant's health meets the minimum standards of 49 CFR 391.41 (a) and (b)."

In addition to a rigorous physical examination, the CFR standards require that drivers of commercial motor vehicles be tested for the use of controlled substances pursuant to Section 390.3(d) of the Federal Motor Carrier Safety Regulations. The controlled substances for which drivers will be tested are an amphetamine, a narcotic, or any other habit-forming drug. The standards also require that drivers have no current clinical diagnosis of alcoholism.

The new ordinance also amends Section 3.10.095, "Issuance and renewal of taxicab licenses" by adding this requirement: "(5) Written certification signed by the city clerk that the applicant is not delinquent in payment of city sales tax, penalty and/or interest and has not failed to file complete sales tax returns with the city where such failure has not been remedied.'

On Nov. 22 the council had approved a motion by Jerald Brown to amend Section 3.10.095 to require that taxis have annual vehicle safety inspections and have backup alarms or cameras installed and working properly before being licensed. However, the amendment was not included in the version of the ordinance presented to the council on Monday, so Brown requested an explanation.

Bahnke said she did not hear from the city attorney about the amendment and she felt that including it would change the intent of the ordinance. If so, the ordinance would have to be resubmitted for a first reading, she noted. A new ordinance is needed prior to Dec. 31 when all taxi licenses in the city will expire, so Bahnke said she made an administrative decision not to include the amendment. The council can include the amendment later, she added.

Councilman Stan Andersen said the current ordinance provides the city clerk with authority to request documentation that a taxi is in safe operating condition. Brown acknowledged that some taxis may need more time to install backup alarms or cameras. The council decided to add that requirement to the ordinance at a January meeting.

The new ordinance approved by the council on Monday also amends Section 3.10.105, "Denial or revocation of taxical or motor bus licenses." The amendment provides that a taxicab or motor bus license may be denied or revoked if the city clerk finds that: "(6) The licensee owes a judgment, delinquent taxes, or a utility bill to the city, or has failed to file complete sales tax returns with the city where such failure has not been remedied."

put up 20 [LEDS]," he added.

The council considered other ideas for use of the $100,000 Community Benefit Share during the public hearing. Mitch Erickson suggested that part of the funds be used for seeding grass for the softball field at the Recreation Center and for other improvements to the field. He also said the funds could be used to develop a soccer field, running track and softball field complex on land owned by Nome Public Schools.

Knodel asked Erickson if he had brought the latter suggestion to the Nome Board of Education. He said he had discussed it briefly with NPS Superintendent Jon Wehde, but not with members of the board. Knodel suggested that Erickson ask board members whether they want to include the project in the NPS budget and then bring it to the council.

Knodel also told Erickson that the council may find money for improvements to the softball field at the Recreation Center during the budget adjustment process in January.

Andersen suggested that part of the Community Benefit Share funds could be used for a fork lift and other equipment to haul chairs and tables to the floor of the Recreation Center gym when it is used for special events. Knodel reminded Andersen that Erickson had suggested building a storage area at the rear of the Recreation Center for tables and chairs. Andersen said $100,000 would not even pay for the foundation and he is not in favor of the idea. Near the end of the meeting, Knodel asked Bahnke to obtain cost estimates for building a storage area at the facility and provide them to the council before January.

Lease agreements

The council adopted ordinances to lease space at the Gold Hill Tutit Ininat Child Care Building to Kawerak Inc. for use by the Head Start Program and The Uiviilat Play and Learn Center. The Head Start Program lease will provide 3,627.20 square feet of space at a cost $4,827.88 per month ($57,934.56 per year). Kawerak will lease 5,090.16 square feet of space for the Uiviilat Play and Learn Center at a monthly cost of $4,251.67 ($51,020.04 per year).

The lease rate for both programs is $2 per square foot for office space and $1 per square foot for classroom/storage areas. Both lease agreements are for one year, expiring on Dec. 31, 2011 with an option for two additional one-year terms upon mutual consent of the parties. Kawerak is the sole user of the Child Care Building and is responsible for all of its janitorial costs.

Other council actions

The State of Alaska's Shared Fisheries Business Tax Program provides for sharing of state fish taxes collected outside municipal boundaries with municipalities that have been affected by fishing industry activities. Municipalities around the state will share about $2.32 million based on 2009 fisheries activity as reported by fish processors on the fish tax returns.

The council approved a resolution certifying that the municipality did suffer significant effects from fisheries business activities within the Norton Sound Fisheries Management Area during the program base year (2009).

Nome and 12 other communities within the management area will share an estimated allocation of $1,774.82 in the FY11 Shared Fisheries Business Tax Program. The City of Nome will submit an application for a share of the allocation to the Department of Commerce, Community and Economic Development, which administers the program.

The council appointed City Manager Bahnke as city treasurer by resolution effective Dec. 13, 2010.

In public comments near the beginning of the meeting, Erickson asked the council to schedule public comments near the end of each meeting to give the public an opportunity to address issues that arise during the meeting. The council responded by approving Knodel's motion to take public comment both early in the meeting and near the end just before council members make their comments.

The council also approved Knodel's motion to send a letter to Gov. Sean Parnell asking him to encourage Joe Miller to stop appealing the election results in his race against Sen. Lisa Murkowski and asking the governor to ratify the election by Christmas so Sen. Murkowski can take office in January.

The council made no objection to the proposed transfer of a beverage dispensary license from Stanley Sobocienski, dba Bering Sea Saloon to Tomter Enterprises LLC, dba Airport Pizza after determining that all utilities bills and city sales taxes had been paid.

The council granted a fee waiver of $1,350 to the Nome Volunteer Fire Department for use of the Nome Recreation Center for the 2010 Firemen's Carnival held Dec. 4.

City Manager's report

Bahnke said preliminary results of the city's comprehensive plan survey show that the need to address public intoxication is the top priority, with junk vehicles and derelict structures a close second. Bahnke said by last week the city had received 150 completed survey forms. Survey results will be compiled after the Dec. 15 deadline for discussion at the next Nome Planning Commission work session in February 2011, she added.

The City of Nome receives approximately $40,000 a year in revenue from the Motor Vehicle Registration Tax administered by the state, Bahnke reported.

A municipality can increase the amount of the tax but must notify the DMV by Jan. 1, 2011 and amend relevant ordinances by April 1, 2011. An increase would take effect Jan. 1, 2012.

"If we don't need the money, why do it?" Andersen asked. He said the city has a few million dollars in the bank.

Bahnke provided the following project updates on city construction

· The city has finalized a contract with Bering Straits Development Co. for electrical upgrades at the Nome Recreation Center. A pre-construction meeting will be held during the week of Dec. 27.

• The city hosted an open house at the new Public Safety Building on Dec. 8. A final accounting for the project will be provided to the council at the next regular meeting.

• The Snow Removal Equipment Building should be completed by Jan. 1. The doors will be installed this week.

• The city's building maintenance staff is painting walls and constructing new counter tops for the Bowling Alley at the Recreation Center while awaiting the arrival of new flooring. Coordination continues with Schemm Bowling Inc. for scheduling and ordering equipment.

• The final inspection of the Nome Elementary School boiler replacement project and pool upgrades recently was completed. The contractor, BSDC, is completing punch list items.

Bahnke said Gov. Parnell and Lt. Gov. Mead Treadwell have tentatively scheduled an inaugural ball in Nome on Feb. 5, 2011. Bahnke will meet with Leo Rasmussen and a planning committee to discuss the city's role in the event.

Allen Maxell was promoted to building inspector after successfully completing exams on building codes and standards, Bahnke reports. She said interviews are ongoing for Nome police officer and city clerk positions.

Man gets 15 years in drunk driving death

By Tyler Rhodes A Nome man will spend 15 years behind bars for striking and killing a man with his truck, and then driving off without telling anyone in September 2009.

Superior Court Judge Ben Esch sentenced Danny Wayne Aukon Jr. to 12 years in jail Dec. 10 on a manslaughter charge and an additional three years for failure to render assistance to Charles Bergamaschi. Bergamaschi died along the side of the Nome-Council Highway just east of Nome after he was struck by Aukon's Ford F-150 pickup around 5:30 a.m. on Sept. 6, 2009. Bergamaschi was 54 at the time.

Esch also sentenced Aukon to a 30-day sentence for driving under the influence. That sentence will be served concurrently with the 12 years for manslaughter.

With 15 years in jail, Aukon will essentially serve half of the potential maximum sentence he was facing. The manslaughter charge carried a maximum sentence of 20 years while failing to render assistance could have netted the 50-year-old man another decade in jail for a total maximum sentence of 30 years. Aukon was also given five years suspended for the manslaughter charge and will face 10 years of probation upon release from jail.

Aukon struck Bergamaschi near Swanberg's dredge while driving on the wrong side of the road as he approached Nome. Aukon, his son and a companion had been up all night drinking, driving and looking to hunt rabbits. A state medical examiner concluded Bergamaschi likely died instantly. After stepping out to look at the body on the road, Aukon and his son got back in the truck and drove home. Nearly two hours later a passing driver noticed Bergamaschi's body and called police. Police were eventually led to Aukon after the companion on the trip, Bert Karmun, went to police later that morning to report what had happened.

Bergamaschi's relatives filled a row in the courtroom for the Dec. 10 sentencing just as they had for Aukon's trial in August. While no family member chose to offer a victims' statement in person at the sentencing, an attorney representing the family read three statements by telephone. Through attorney David Schlerf, two of Bergamaschi's daughters and his son each asked that Aukon receive the maximum sentence available. "I don't think there's enough time to ever forgive him," Ada Bergamaschi said through her statement. Bergamaschi's son, Joseph Attatayuk, mourned the loss for him and his future children. "My child is never going to be able to know how wonderful his or her grandfather was," he said in his statement. Daughter Mary Bergamaschi also expressed her loss. "I will never fulfill my dream to have my father walk me down the aisle," she lamented in her statement.

Dressed in jail-issued yellow pants and shirt, Aukon sat stoically beside his attorney, Bob Lewis, as the sentencing hearing unfolded. As he had during his trial, Aukon wore headphones to better hear in the courtroom. When given the chance to speak before Judge Esch handed down the sentence, Aukon quietly expressed remorse. "I am very sorry and give my sincere condolences to the Charlie Bergamaschi family," he said.

Aukon's sentence was nearly twice as long as what Lewis was seeking for his client. Lewis had suggested Aukon spend seven years in jail with an additional eight suspended for the manslaughter charge. He suggested any sentence regarding the failure to render assistance should be served concurrently with the jail time ordered for the manslaughter charge.

Lewis argued that his client had a consistent work history, consistently supported his family, and was a changed man since the drunken road trip under the pretense of a rabbit hunt tragically ended with Bergamaschi's death and Aukon's later arrest. While Lewis asked for a moderate sentence for Aukon, he also acknowledged the magnitude of his client's actions, calling his failure to seek aid for Bergamaschi "abominable" and "horrible." He noted that Aukon had prepared a statement for the victim's family; however, it was refused by Bergamaschi's relatives. "There isn't anything he's going to say that's going to fix this situation for the Bergamaschi family," Lewis said.

District Attorney John Earthman, who prosecuted the case for the State of Alaska, did not ask for a specific sentence for Aukon. "Mr. Aukon really merits a sentence in the higher range," Earthman argued. "I'm not going to give the court a number, but ask that it be high."

Earthman noted that Aukon had not simply got behind the wheel after having too much to drink but was out for an extended period of time with drinking and driving essentially being the point of the trip. "It's pretty egregious drinking and driving as opposed to someone who's a little over the limit," he said. Approximately six to 6 1/2 hours after striking Bergamaschi, Aukon registered a blood-alcohol content of 0.141 percent, which approaches twice the legal limit for driving.

Even more troubling, Earthman said, was Aukon's handling of the situation after the collision took place. "He didn't just do nothing. He got out, found he had hit the man and then took steps to basically cover it up," Earthman said.

Guilty pleas made in sexual assault cases

By Tyler Rhodes

In separate cases, two area residents entered guilty pleas Dec. 8 to charges relating to sexual abuse of minors under the age of 13 in Superior Court in Nome.

Both Sylvia Ivanoff, 44, and Patrick Apatiki, 31, accepted plea deals to settle the sexual abuse cases against them. They made their separate pleas in the unrelated cases before Superior Court Judge Ben Esch.

Dressed in yellow jail-issued pants and shirt, a tearful Sylvia Ivanoff pleaded guilty to an amended charge of attempted sexual abuse of a minor under 13 years old before Judge Esch. Ivanoff, who lives in Nome, was originally indicted Sept. 18, 2009 on three charges of sexual abuse of a minor, two in the first degree and one in the second degree, for alleged sexual penetration with three different youth.

Ivanoff's plea came in exchange for a sentence of two years in jail and two suspended along with a five years of probation. According to court documents, the amended charge only involved one victim who was a month shy of his or her 13th birthday when Ivanoff attempted to engage in sexual contact with him or her on April 5, 2009.

Shortly after she took a seat next to her attorney as her case was read by Judge Esch, Ivanoff's voice cracked as she began to cry. After agreeing that she was not forced or coerced into making her decision, Ivanoff paused when Judge Esch asked how she would plead. "I have to say it?" she asked her public defender, Samuel Severin. "Yes," he replied. "Guilty," Ivanoff told Esch after another pause.

While a sentencing hearing has been set for March 11 in the case, with credit for time served, Ivanoff will have already spent two years behind bars by the time the hearing occurs. Judge Esch said he would ask that the pre-sentence report of Ivanoff be expedited and would entertain a motion for releasing her from jail once she reached the twoyear mark. Ivanoff will be required to register as a sex offender.

Apatiki to serve no more than 15 years

In a separate case, Gambell resident Patrick Apatiki pleaded guilty Dec. 8 to a charge of second-degree sexual abuse of a minor under 13 in exchange for a jail sentence of no more than 15 years. The agreement includes the dismissal of a charge of first-degree sexual abuse of a minor in the same case and a stipulation that no charges would be brought against him in relation to alleged activity with minors in 2010.

The state's complaint against Apatiki gives disturbing details of years of abuse in Gambell several years ago with a minor who is approximately 12 years younger than Apatiki. According to the Troopers' statement, the young man suffered repeated abuse from Apatiki when he was between the ages of 9 and 14. The youth reported that Apatiki, who threatened to kill the young man if he told anyone of the abuse, would hold him down and sexually assault him. The Troopers' report also cited a medical exam of the victim that showed a history of repeated anal penetration with a blunt object for an extended period of time.

The Troopers' statement says the young man disclosed the abuse to a counselor outside of Gambell in 2009, approximately four years after the incidents took place. The counselor reported the abuse to the state Troopers who recorded a call between the victim and Apatiki. In that call, the victim described the abuse and said he felt scared when Apatiki perpetrated the acts. "Yeah, forget that stuff," Apatiki replied, according to the report.

According to the report, Trooper Jonnathon Stroebele interviewed Apatiki in December 2009 at which time he admitted performing sexual acts with the minor, but said he was not sure if he had penetrated the young man.

In making his guilty plea, Apatiki waived his right to an indictment. The plea deal will include 10 years of probation after his jail sentence. Apatiki will also be required to register as a sex offender.

Apatiki has been charged with numerous offenses over the years. mostly simple assaults and disorderly conduct cases. In 2006 he faced charges of assault, reckless violence, malicious destruction of property and family violence. According to the state's online court database, he was found guilty on the reckless violence and property destruction charges in that case.

Sentencing for Apatiki is scheduled for March 14.

Schubert takes the helm of Bering Straits Native Corp.

Tim Towarak steps down as president to concentrate on Subsistence Board work

By Tyler Rhodes

Bering Straits Native Corp. announced a change of leadership in its top ranks Tuesday as Tim Towarak steps down as president of the regional Alaska Native corporation.

Towarak will yield the position to Gail Schubert who currently serves the corporation as its chief executive officer. Towarak, who has long signaled his plans to step aside from his leadership role at the corporation, cited concerns over conflicts of interest now that he serves as the chairman of the Federal Subsistence Board. Towarak served as president and CEO of the corporation from 2000 to December 2009, when he ceded the CEO title to Schubert.

Schubert has been a long-time board member of the corporation and had previously served as BSNC's general counsel before becoming CEO a year ago. She is originally from Unalakleet and has an extensive corporate work background, including a private law practice in Anchorage and work at Wall Street firms, including the Federal Reserve Bank of New York.

Schubert takes the helm at the corporation at a time of profitability and uncertainty. In his tenure, Towarak saw the corporation through a tremendous growth period, from gross revenues of $9 million in 2000 to $190.3 million in 2010. Nearly all of that growth can be attributed to the federal government's contracting program, known as the 8(a) program, run through the Small Business Administration. While Bering Straits continues to perform work for the government through the program, stipulations that give Alaska Native corporations preferential treatment are under intense scrutiny in Washington, D.C., and are threatened to be curtailed.

In a prepared statement, Towarak expressed confidence in Schubert and gratitude for the corporation and its staff. "[Schubert] has excellent judgment and leadership skills and has served BSNC's shareholders well since joining our management team," he said. "I want to thank the BSNC staff for

Nome Kennel Club considers weight-pull contests for Iditarod

The Annual Meeting of the Nome Kennel Club occurred Dec. 9 in the City Council Chambers. Fourteen people attended and paid dues for themselves, spouses and families. Kirsten Bey and Sandra Medearis will remain on the board of directors. Janet Balice and Pat Owens are new board members. There remains one open board seat.

Ideas for the upcoming year include:

 Investigating the possibility of having a weight pull contest during Iditarod. There are at least two weight pull organizations that have expressed interest in holding a weight pull contest in Nome. Years ago, a weight pull contest was a regular part of the "Month of Iditarod" festivities. Perhaps Nome Kennel Club can revive it.

youth to get involved in dog mushing

Trails getting into shape

The club continues to purchase trail stakes and reflective tape, and to mark and maintain trails in and around the Nome area.

Two 10-mile loops have been staked within the past week.

One goes from Icy View up the Osborne Road part way. It then comes back toward town across the top of a hill, down the hill, connecting up to the north side of the "Gold Hill" loop and back to the outgoing trail. The Gold Hill loop has not yet been staked; snow is still pretty thin in many places.

The other staked trail goes from the "pole line" (what used to be the pole line west of Beltz Road) west, crosses Center Creek Road just north of the old dump, goes west to the tripod trail that connects the Snake River to the Teller Road, south on the tripod trail and then the pole line. (There is also a staked trail that connects the north and south sections of this loop close to Center Creek Road, making about a 5-mile loop instead of 10 miles, utilizing the same road

The club also plans to erect some tripods with good reflectors along the "pole line" so that this area continues to be well marked for all the traffic that uses it.

The club continues to maintain the Topkok shelter cabin and also a cabin at Bangor Creek in the Snake River Valley.

Monthly meetings of the Kennel Club occur the first Thursday of each month at 5:30 p.m. The club has an office in the basement of the Post Office Building. Club members and the general public are welcome to attend.

Cabrera leads Nanook wrestlers at state

Nome places 13th in team competition

Led by Gabe Cabrera and his second-place effort, Nome's wrestlers worked their way to a 13th place finish last weekend at the state meet in Nikiski.

Cabrera, wrestling at 119 lbs, was the highest placer among the Nanooks at the meet, losing to Dillingham's Jared Miller in the finals by a 9-6 decision. Tyler Eide worked his way to fourth at 112 lbs and David Stickel nabbed sixth place at 135 lbs.

The food diary as an easy tool for weight loss

Bob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Looking for an easy-to-use method for losing weight? Try counting calories. As a weight loss method, simply recording what you eat works amazingly well, requires minimal time, and does not involve purchasing expensive equipment.

First obtain a small notebook, or set up a computer spreadsheet if you are ambitious. Allocate one day to each page. Then for two weeks record every thing you eat each day.

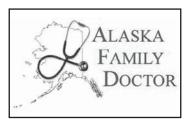

This rule must be kept strictly: "If it goes in the mouth, it goes on the paper." Eat a cracker? Write it down. Chew a stick of gum? Put it in the record. Drink a mocha latte? That counts, too. Every meal, snack, beverage and dessert should find its way into the notebook.

At the end of each day write down the number of calories consumed beside each food item. Next to cracker write "20 calories." The stick of gum has 4 calories. A specialty coffee can have up to 500 calories.

Record the number of calories for every item in your log. Do not worry about which foods are carbohydrates, fats, or proteins. Just look for the total calories.

Finding the number of calories in any given food is not hard. In almost every case someone else has done the homework for you. Processed foods will have the number of calories listed on a side panel under nutrition facts. Use your favorite search engine to find calories in fresh foods or restaurant meals. For example, to find out the number of calories in a plate of spaghetti with meat sauce, just type in "calories spaghetti meat sauce." Immediately, you will get estimates from 255 to 350 calories per cup. notebook, you would record the average, 300 calories for each cup of spaghetti eaten.

For additional help finding calorie information, there is no shortage of reference books, smart phone apps, and online programs. Most people find this process becomes almost intuitive with each passing day since we tend to eat similar foods from day

Once you have determined the number of calories in each food item, add up the total number of calories consumed each day and record this number at the bottom of each day's list of foods.

At the end of two weeks, calculate the average number of calories consumed daily. Then lower this average number of daily calories by ten percent. For example, if the average daily total is 2,500 calories, lower your daily consumption by 250 calories. Simply look back over your daily food diary and take out one or two items that add up to 250 calories. That's all it takes to lose weight safely.

Using a food diary for weight management does not require a person to give up any particular food. The white chocolate mocha can still be on the list; just order a 12 ounce instead of a 16 ounce cup, and hold the whipped cream, savoring each sip a little longer. This little change will save 200 calories for the day.

The principle of calorie reduction for weight loss is elementary. Calories are units of energy. Either the body uses this energy during activity or stores the energy as fat for later use. What is amazing is how little we actually overeat.

According to research at the National Institute of Health, the majority of Americans consume a mere extra 31 calories a day in excess of calories burned during activity. About ten percent of people who are genetically predisposed to weight gain consume up to 200 calories a day in excess of metabolic needs.

Using a daily food diary helps identify the source of extra calories. For most people, simply identifying the source of calories leads to healthier eating behaviors. Using a food diary requires no special training. It is a simple tool that almost anyone can use to aid in calorie reduction.

ADF&G kills 12 wolves at Port Heiden

Over the weekend, the Alaska Department of Fish and Game took 12 wolves in response to residents' concerns in Port Heiden. The community of 100 has asked for help with aggressive wolves that have been killing pets and approaching people in frequent visits to the community. Residents report that wolf numbers, attacks on domestic animals, and threatening behavior toward people is increasing. Wolves have killed five dogs and two cats this year, including two dogs in the last few days. Villagers have killed six wolves in the vicinity of the village since August. In March, wolves killed a teacher jogging in Chignik. The wolves were shot from a helicopter and were taken to a Fairbanks veterinarian for examination.

NOAA closes fishing grounds to protect Steller sea lions

The National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration released a biological opinion on the endangered Steller sea lion that triggerd the closure of fishing grounds in the western Aleutians. These restrictions are likely to impact Atka mackerel and Pacific cod fisheries. The restrictions were prompted by evidence of a continuing decline in Steller sea lion populations in the western Aleutians. even while stocks in the eastern Aleutians and Gulf of Alaska are rebounding. NOAA's draft biological opinion concluded that catches of mackerel and cod in the western Aleutians were causing nutritional stress and decreased reproduction in the sea lion population. In response to the decline, NOAA and the fishery management council proposed plans to cut back fishing,

Alaska musk ox deaths blamed on mineral deficiency

AP— Musk oxen deaths among the herd researchers kept at the University of Alaska Fairbanks have been blamed on a trace mineral deficiency. The Fairbanks Daily News-Miner reports that nine oxen have died at the university's Large Animal Research Station after a school veterinarian euthanized two older bulls that never recovered from the suspected deficiency. Veterinarian John Blake said all the animals were underweight and lacking in cobalt, copper and selenium - essential for the animals. The deaths of nine of the school's 36 musk oxen represent the biggest die-off since the herd was established in 1979. The condition of the remaining 25 animals in the herd is improving with mineral supplements and vitamin injections.

"The Parable of the Teacher"

Linda Maack, KNOM Inspirational Director For the Nome Ministerial Association

This parable is such a simple story but there is a great lesson in the end. A teacher placed a large glass jar on the table and told the class that this jar represents the jar of life. The teacher pulled out a tray full of softball size rocks and placed a few of them in the jar. After having to pull a rock out of the jar because it wouldn't fit, he asked the class if the jar was full. The class came to the consensus that it was full. The teacher proceeded to pull out a tray of golf ball size rocks and placed them in the jar between the larger rocks. He asked the class if the jar was full and the class said yes. Now, the teacher was filling the space between the softball size rocks and golf-ball sized rocks with pebbles. The class was no longer sure if the jar was full. Of course, the teacher assured them the jar was not full by shoving sand in the jar. After the jar was full of sand, pebbles, medium and large rocks, the teacher asked the class if this jar is now full. The class didn't know what to think until a student said there were no more trays of rocks. They agreed; the jar was full. This prompted the teacher to walk to the sink and fill up the remaining space within the jar with water. The teacher then asked the class what they learned. One student voiced their opinion that there is always room for more. This is not the point the teacher was trying to make. The teacher explained that a person does not have a limitless capacity to fill their life with stuff. Remember, they are limited to the simple jar.

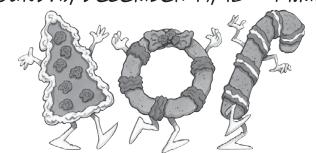

The lesson to be learned from this parable is to put your "big rocks" in your jar first. If you don't, there won't be room for the smaller rocks and

If you stop and think about this story, you might wonder what the rocks symbolize. The big rocks can represent God, family, friends. The medium size rocks represent education, job, or other important things in life. The smaller rocks are your hobbies. The water and sand can represent life that occurs around you. Just as the story goes, we cannot allow life that occurs around us to be first in our lives, for if we put the "smaller rocks" or "sand" in first, we won't have room for the larger things.

I'll leave you with a Bible verse from Matthew 6:33. It says, "Instead, be concerned above everything else with the Kingdom of God and with what he requires of you, and he will provide you with all these other things.'

In high school, Chris was a varsity cheerleader, an active member of the student council and was known by her classmates as "Minnie." In 1982 she graduated from Nome-Beltz High School with honors and was crowned Miss ANB in 1983.

After high school, she spread her wings and left Nome for college. She attended Western Washington University, American Business School in London and the University of Alaska Anchorage. After college she returned to Nome where she found her soul mate, Nate Perkins. Chris and Nate wed on November 12, 1988 and within a few years they Chris completely adored her family. Her husband Nate and her sons, Jasen and Jeremy, were the light of her life. They spent a lot of their time together at their camp in Council, which she considered her second home. Some of her favorite things included four-wheeling, boating, fishing, berry picking, Eskimo food, "carding" with her sisters, planting flowers, and making jam to share with family and friends during the holidays. Her favorite activity was "vegging" at home with Nate, eating popcorn and watching movies and enjoying her "me" time.

Even though she was busy with her family, she always made time for her sisters, making sure that they were loved and taken care of. She was always there to scold them if she felt they needed it (and they always did).

Chris held many people close to her heart and was extremely considerate and obsessively organized. She never missed an important day such as a birthday, anniversary or holiday and gave much thought in every gift she picked out. She was well known for her great taste and those she held close to her always felt loved. Chris was very outspoken and was never afraid to exercise her right to freedom of speech and share her thoughts and concerns about issues that were important to her and the subjects she was passionate about. She was very active in the Nome community and kept herself involved with various boards and committees in order to make things better for current and future generations. She was very passionate about her career, working with the Eskimo Walrus Commission alongside her partner in crime, Vera Metcalf. Many successes and heated debates kept Chris on her toes and fighting for what she felt needed to be addressed.

Chris is survived by her husband Nathan, her sons Jasen and Jeremy, parents Jack and Tiny Carpenter, sisters Gigi Immingan and her husband David, Marlene McCormack and her husband Lucas, Tiffany Martinson and her husband Adam. Chris is also survived by her mother-in-law Jane Perkins, brother-in-law Wesley Perkins and his wife Terrie, sistersin-law Julie Perkins Vincek and her husband Darrell and Janna Fowler and her husband Marlin as well as many nieces and nephews.

Megan Brewer

Megan Brewer

Megan Brewer, 53, died suddenly of natural causes on Thursday, December 9 at her home in Nome. She was a treasured part of a large family, including her mother, Doris Fichtner, her father, Robert Brewer, and her 12 brothers and sisters -Robby, Laura, Susan, Sandy, Linda, Scott, Dusty, Matthew, Todd, Amy, Gigi, and John. She was also a loving and generous aunt to her many nieces and nephews. Buddy and Rosebud, her beloved labs, were precious to her as well.

Megan was born in Washington, DC, and grew up in Maryland. She graduated from Montana State University with a degree in education, and then earned a master's degree in special education. Her first teaching job was in Golovin, and then she made her home in Nome.

Megan was independent and funloving, but family and friends were always her priority and she traveled as often as she could to the East Coast, Montana, Mexico, Oregon, and Washington maintaining those connections. She also enjoyed listening to music and caring for her beloved dogs. She had a full life, a terrific sense of humor and an appreciation of nature's beauty.

While she missed her East Coast family, she felt much love and purpose in her life's work as a teacher to the children of Nome. She taught education. She felt a deep connection with Alaska, and had many special relationships within the Nome community. She will be missed beyond measure.

Ada Arlene Saccheus

Ada Arlene Saccheus, "Biqsiq, Ayagin" Feb. 24, 2008 -Dec. 5, 2010

Ada Arlene Saccheus (Biqsiq, Ayagin) was born on Feb. 24, 2008 to Albert Saccheus and LaVerne Anagick at the Alaska Native Medical Center. She died Dec. 5.

At 33 months of age Ada lived her life to the fullest. As a newborn she lived in Nome and when she was 7.5 months old her family moved to Unalakleet, where she became an avid Wolfpack fan. She captured her audience with her roaring monster impression while a resident of Unalakleet.

When her brother was asked what his baby sister's name was, he would proudly reply, "Mine Pink Tinka-bell." Ada and Gabe fought over the same toys, yet Gabe watched over his sister, preventing her from swallowing quarters. He also tried to feed Ada a huge grape when she was two months old. Gabe always had his arm around his sister's neck while they rode in back of the truck or in the boat. Ada would make numerous boat trips with her family to Elim to visit her sister, Nicole, and brothers, Justin and Freddy, and her grandma "Mas" Bessie Saccheus and many aunts and uncles.

She loved to eat Eskimo food and dropped everything for "bayries!" berries. Ada also loved to visit her Amouk "Amout" Anna Etageak in the evenings. As a baby she had the biggest cheeks and when Momma and Daddy would hold her, she would put us to sleep; she was our little "sleeping pill." Ada would have her pink purse and in the purse would either be two of each: a tractor, truck or an airplane; she loved playing with her brother's toys. Ada was a frequent flyer to Nome/Anchorage to visit her endocrinologist. Ada enjoyed attending children's church. When it was time to get ready to leave home she would get excited to go to church, Papa's house to eat, or to the gym.

Ada is survived by parents Albert Saccheus and LaVerne Anagick; brothers, Gabriel "bubba/ brother" Anagick, Freddy Saccheus and Julian Moses; sister, Nicole Saccheus; her Papa "Gimbo" Walter Anagick; her "dote" Uncle (McGann), Uncle Langford Adams Jr.; close cousins, Kim Adams and cousin Colton, Chasity "Wheat-ie" Adams and Langford Adams III; Uncle Kenny and Loretta, Uncle Boyd and Viola Trigg; Aunt Christine and Utch Amaktoolik; Aunt Grace and Ken Takak; and Uncle Ross and Elizabeth Saccheus; many relatives and friends she touched in her short, but sweet and energetic life. Ada was preceded in death by her "Aahmm" Alice Anagick, her grandpa Julius "Fritz" Saccheus, sister Shannon Saccheus, and "Amouk" Anna Etageak.

Peace to her memory.

Andrew Dean Aluk Tocktoo

Andrew Dean Tocktoo was born to Bob, Sr. and Inez Tocktoo in Nome on July 18, 1975. Andrew died November 30, 2010.

Andrew, known as "AD" to many, was raised in Brevig Mission, along with his siblings Hannah, Janice, Aaron, Bobby, Jr., Jeffery, Polly and Brandon. Andrew was the oldest of his brothers. Andrew graduated from Brevig Mission School in 1994. He started working for the City of Brevig Mission soon after he graduated and worked until his sudden death.

Andrew wanted to join the Army, but due to medical reasons, he wasn't able to fulfill his dream. "AD" had a lot of friends from the region. While working for the City of Brevig, he worked closely with his brother Aaron and the City's vehicles. He was known for being very friendly to others, humble, and a caring, loving father to his six children and his companion. He was proud of the things that he bought; he would go to his parent's house and share with them the items he bought.

"AD" loved to take part in subsistence gathering with his friends and family. He worked so hard to keep one of his vehicles going just to go out hunting.

He was preceded in death by his brother Alfred Reuben, his grandparents Kenneth and Helen Kakoona, and Polly Anna Tocktoo, uncles Paul, Ben and Roy, aunt Mary, cousins Archie Kakoona, Reuben Tocktoo, Daniel Tocktoo, Jamie Kakoona, David K. Tocktoo, and Angela Olanna.

Simulators

Alaska Career and Technical Center dormitory. Stiles, representing Norton Sound Economic Development Corp.'s for-profit subsidiary Siu Corp., was at NACTEC Monday with a broad group of dignitaries to see the eight new heavy equipment simulators recently acquired by the regional educational center. Covering machines from bulldozers to front-end loaders, the simulators consisting of captain's chairs with foot pedals, dual joysticks and large flat-screens lined the wall.

Largely funded with donations from Siu and Bering Straits Native Corp., the simulators occupy the space in the dormitory that was once reserved for air hockey, foosball and ping-pong tables. With multiple controls, sharp and lifelike graphics and a video gamelike appeal, the machines ensure that the room is still a draw for the students taking courses and staying at NACTEC.

The campus's director, Doug Walrath, said even with the game tables gone, students still gather in the room. 'There's a social element here. Students are learning from one another." More than just a game, the simulators are providing the students valuable training that could set them on their way to getting good-paying jobs in a region where work opportunities with high wages are hard to find.

Monday's event served as a ribbon cutting for the new simulators, one of which the NACTEC staff had just got up and running. Since NATEC sets its course schedule a year in advance and the machines are a new addition, Walrath said there have been no specific classes set up around the simulators yet. As of now, students from the region who travel to the facility for the two-week courses on everything from small engine repair to culinary skills can use the simulators in their down time.

As fun as they can be, the machines which cost anywhere from $12,000 to $25,000 are far from simply being souped-up video games. Those at Monday's ribbon cutting who had experience behind wheel of the real loaders and bulldozers said the simulators' controls and scenarios mirror the real deal. Mitch Erickson said besides some newer control features, the front-end loader simulator he was operating worked just like the one he had used in real life.

Martin Aukongak, a NACTEC working group member who also works as a heavy equipment operator in Golovin, attested to the reallife feel of the machines. He could also vouch for the job opportunities that come with learning to operate the big machines. From a very young age, riding in heavy equipment was part of life for Aukongak. He recalled riding around in a dump truck at the age of 5 while his dad drove. Nowadays he drives that same dump truck and a number of other large machines.

Despite his early exposure to heavy equipment, Aukongak had to earn his way into the driver's seat. He recalled working as a laborer at 19 years old and being ordered out of a dump truck by his boss. "He told me to get out until I got a CDL [commercial drivers license]," he said. Disheartened by the rebuke from his boss but determined to follow the career path he desired, Aukongak went to Barrow for school and passed the state test for his CDL. "I turned that negative into a positive," he said.

Aukongak said he hoped young people in the region would also see a positive career route in working with heavy equipment. He sees the NACTEC simulators as a good start.

BIG RIG-Ruby Nassuk of Koyuk takes a virtual dump truck for a spin during the NACTEC demonstration of its heavy equipment simulators Monday.

"[Employers] want you to have the right training, or if you don't know someone they're not letting you into the equipment," he said.

Caterpillar and partnering software companies have made a total of eight simulators. NACTEC has them all. Walrath said NACTEC is the first facility in the nation to put into operation the new bulldozer simulator. The other simulators mimic a large-wheel loader, small-wheel loader, grader, offhighway truck, mining truck, wheel tractor scraper and an excavator.

To have the actual machines in Nome for training purposes would cost approximately $5.2 million, Walrath said. The room full of simulators is valued at about $170,000 and they don't use a drop of fuel. "That's the price of one of those small front-end loaders," Aukongak said.

Walrath said when he was first approached about providing some sort of heavy equipment operator training at NACTEC the thought of liability and equipment costs made the idea seem completely out of reach. Now with the simulators in place, Walrath is starting to scheme about potential partnerships with entities to put students in real machinery after they have shown a certain level of aptitude on the simulators. Walrath said he is also investigating real-equipment training options for students outside of Nome once they have worked on the simulators.

On hand Monday with a pair of scissors to cut the ribbon was Kawerak Inc. President Loretta Bullard. Walrath credited Bullard with helping push the idea of getting heavy equipment training at NACTEC. "Kawerak has a number of construction projects in the villages," Bullard said. "They are well-paying jobs."

Bullard said the idea had been floated about bringing actual heavy equipment to the region for training purposes, but that the cost was prohibitive. She said the simulators should help link regional residents with good-paying jobs near home. "It will ensure our local people get to work and keep the jobs in the region," Bullard said.

When given his turn to speak before helping cut the ribbon, Siu Corp.'s Stiles said the corporation was proud to be a part of the project. Like a kid in an arcade, he also couldn't hide his desire to jump in the driver's seat. "I really want to get behind the wheels and try these out," Stiles said as the group prepared to cut the yellow and black caution tape that fittingly served as the ribbon for the event.

Shortly after the tape hit the floor and for quite a while afterward-Stiles was behind the control of the dozer making good on his word.

Unalakleet fuel spill totals nearly 11,000 gallons

By Tyler Rhodes

A Dec. 12 diesel fuel spill in Unalakleet initially estimated to involve approximately 1,000 gallons has turned out to be more than 10 times the size of that first estimate

According to the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation, an unattended fuel transfer operation conducted by Unalakleet Valley Electric Cooperative resulted in nearly 11,000 gallons of No. 2 diesel fuel being spilled. According to the DEC's Tom DeRuyter, the spill occurred as the electrical co-op employee conducting the fuel transfer from the large tank to a small container left the scene to respond to some sort of emergency situation. DeRuyter did not know the reason the employee left the scene. The spill happened near 5 p.m. on Dec. 12.

Multiple messages left with Unalakleet Valley Electric Co-op manager Ike Towarak were

With the one person who was aware of the moving fuel absent from the scene, the small tank reached its limit while the diesel continued to flow. "Nobody knew the transfer was occurring," DeRuyter said. "It looks like it was a classic overfill.'

As of Dec. 16, DeRuyter, who is the DEC's on-scene coordinator for the northern area response team, said it appeared none of the fuel had escaped the containment area in which the tanks are stationed. A DEC situation report issued Dec. 16 noted that approximately 5,890 gallons of fuel had been recovered as of noon that day. The recovered fuel is being transferred to two 5.000 gallon takes located within the containment area. DeRuyter described the secondary containment area as a liner on which six inches of Ozenna received part of her wish Dec. 15 when one of her boys arrived in Little Diomede after flying in the helicopter that has predominately only been able to deliver mail for the past year and a half. "There was one person that made it back that was on mainland since September," she said over the phone from Diomede Dec. 17. "He's the first community member that was able to return home out of the eight that were waiting."

Seven more were still waiting to get back home as of press time Tuesday, including Ozenna's other son who is due to report to Fort Benning, Ga., for Army basic training in January. "He really wants to come home for the holidays," she said. Whether or not he will make it home-and back off the island to go to boot camp after the holidays - largely depends on the ice right now.

When pan ice covers the roughly 25 miles of open water between Little Diomede and the village of Wales on the mainland, Evergreen Helicopters

Dear Editor

The annual Shirley Tree is up but at a new location: the Nome Youth Facility, on 4th Ave. by the greenhouse.

The Shirley Tree is a combative named for Shirley Noet, a wonderful woman, a wonderful mother, grandmother, spouse and a very special friend whose loss to cancer affected so many in Nome. The Shirley Tree exists for everyone who has suffered the loss of a loved one or to remember one from whom you are separated and want to remember at Christmas. A ribbon, a decorated egg shell, a note, a picture, a child's handprint or finger painting, a wooden carving or little sign, a bunch of dried herbs or beach greens, whatever you like or whatever is significant to the remembrance of your loved one.

The Shirley Tree exists for that purpose. You are invited to and are most welcome to place an ornament on the Tree at any time of the day or night. You'll see it — lots of lights.

The Shirley Tree will stand at the Youth Facility until Iditarod at which time it will be "transplanted" to the Nome National Forest. When the ice goes out, so will our remembrances gently drift out into the Bering Sea on the Shirley Tree.

Happy Holidays,

Jana Varrati
Friend of Shirley

PS. Because the Shirley Tree will drift out into the Bering Sea — our Bering Sea, I suggest your ornaments not be made of plastic.

No Place Like Nome
There's no place like Nome for the holidays. Sounds like an old Bing Crosby tune, but it's true. Nome is a fun town at Christmas and New Years— good parties, good cooking, good times and good friends.
The best part of Christmas in Nome is no travel hassle— no pat-downs by TSA, no missed flights, no waiting and no standby lines. We're al-

As usual the Nome Fire Department has put up the decorative lights and placed the colorful candy canes, candles and bells in strategic locations around town. However, the big snowman on Bering Street stands a little too close to the Norton Sound smokers stand. It has a nicotine tan. We also have a fantastic view of the rising and setting sun on the southern horizon of the Bering Sea. The dancing jewel colors of the aurora and the pink alpenglow on Anvil Mountain are sights we are privileged to enjoy as we stroll the town. The special softness of the snow covers the things we should have thrown away, but didn't. We take a deep breath of clear crisp clean air and are glad

As we sit back and contemplate the year gone by and the year to come, let's put some effort into plans for Nome's downtown revitalization. Let's cherish our past but let's also plan for a town with all eyes on the future and a plan to show that Nome is on of the most livable ready home so let's kick back and enjoy our town.

Sometimes we have to write about something in an effort to bring about positive change in our lives. It's not easy to fight, much less to succeed a little. But try we must, regardless of the outcome(s).

Alcohol. Sounds way too familiar, doesn't it? But we have allowed it to take a good grip on us. It seems like there is no turning back. It doesn't matter whether it kills us, we just keep at it. But fight, fight, fight, we must! I'm with a few and brave out there to fight this merciless evil, regardless of risk and retaliation from bootleggers and users. I'm grateful with a heartfelt emotion for your courage to stand firm, looking out for your loved ones and even to those outside your family.

My village is Gambell. Yours is probably no different than mine in its woes with alcohol and marijuana. Some of our governing body leaders/members are users, unfortunately. So hence, they don't give all they got to combat brew production, importation, bootlegging, and joint sellers. They leave their joint sellers alone for fear, not generally from fellow citizens, but from running out of their own supply of it to support their use/habit.

Sober citizens, concerned people, we have not lost yet. You declared war on alcohol/marijuana when you sobered up or even when you have not used at all. We need to toughen up and do the best we can to stop/report who is producing brew, importing and bootlegging. Even as I write this letter, some of those bootleggers are slyly planning their next sale date. This weekend?

Sucks to hear all this, doesn't it? But it's the cold truth of continued corruption in our village(s). Our leaders who gather together to combat this, but still use it themselves, are not going to find working, effective answers.

All this reminds me of that old western "You Know My Name," (based on true events), Sam Elliot as Bill Tilghman. But this is our fight in our village. Would you be a "Bill" to your village and not a coward? Sincerely,

Concerned Person

A HOLIDAY TRADITION — Faithful members attending the Third Annual Footwarming of the Radiator Club on Christmas 1908 in Nome, Alaska. One hundred years ago, social clubs were an extremely popular method to while away the eight long winter months when Nome was totally isolated from the rest of the world. The Elks, Arctic Brotherhood, Fraternal Order of Eagles and the Free Masons were some of the more aristocratic groups. The Radiator Club was established as a happy mockery of the more established straight-laced organizations. There was a lot of footwarming going on back then! Many of these guys look like present day Nomeites.

Alaska high court considers disputed Senate race

ĀP—Legal wrangling Alaska's contested U.S. Senate race reached the state Supreme Court last Friday, with justices hearing Republican Joe Miller's appeal of a lower court ruling that amounted to a victory for rival Lisa Murkowski. Miller is appealing a state judge's decision to toss out his challenge to the handling of the election and counting of write-in ballots for Murkowski, who waged a write-in campaign after losing the GOP primary to Miller. The state Supreme Court did not immediately rule Friday.

Miller watched Friday as his attorney, Michael Morley, told the court the state should be held to a strict reading of a law that calls for ovals on ballots to be filled in, and for the last name of a candidate or the name as it appears on the declaration of candidacy to be written.

The state, relying on case law, allowed for ballots with misspellings to be counted toward Murkowski's tally and used discretion in determining voter intent.

Unofficial results of the election showed Murkowski ahead by 10,328 votes, or 2.169 votes when ballots challenged by Miller's campaign were excluded

Miller, in court filings, claimed potentially thousands of additional ballots could be in dispute - and that these could affect the outcome of the race. He raised concerns about precincts where election workers failed to mark whether they'd gotten identification of voters and ballots with similar-looking signatures. He also raised the specter that felon sex offenders may have been wrongfully allowed to cast ballots. Carey dismissed the first two claims as unsupported; he didn't address the third.

The state has disputed the allegations but Miller's attorneys maintain he did not have adequate time to fully investigate the concerns.

The state Division of Elections said officials could certify the race within hours if Judge Ralph Beistline lifts his stay.

BP pleads not guilty to probation violation

The Anchorage Daily News says the oil giant pleaded not guilty on Monday to probation violations related to a criminal conviction for a North Slope oil spill in 2006. BP has been on probation since it pleaded guilty to violating the federal Clean Water Act for the spill blamed on a corroded Prudhoe Bay pipeline. Federal prosecutors say BP violated probation when it spilled about 13,000 gallons of oil onto the tundra at the Lisburne oil field three years later. BP Alaska spokesman Steve Rinehart says that the company has met all the terms of its 2007 plea agreement and does not need to remain on probation. The company has agreed to abide by the terms of its probation while the case proceeds in federal

Trial of former Fish and Game commissioner delayed

Former Fish and Game commissioner Denby Lloyd's trial date has been moved from last week to February 14. Lloyd is charged with drunk driving and reckless driving when police stopped him this summer in Juneau. A police sergeant has said Lloyd was stopped for expired tags but failed a field sobriety test administered after an officer saw signs of possible intoxication.

Alaska's unemployment rate grows to 8 percent

Alaska state officials say that Alaska's unemployment rate grew to 8 percent last month, its highest level since May. The Alaska Labor and Workforce department released the numbers and report that Alaska remains below the November national average of 9.8 percent of unemployed. Alaska's seasonally adjusted unemployment rate for November 2010 compared to 7.9 percent in October and 8.5 percent in November 2009.

Kensington Mine fined for environmental violations

The federal Environmental Protection Agency fined Kensington gold mine operator Coeur Alaska Inc. $170,000. The fines stem from Clean Water Act violations over unpermitted discharges. The EPA reports sediment and acid rock drainage into Lower Slate Lake and East Fork Slate Creek during the mine's construction between 2006 and 2010. According to AP, company officials did not believe the amount of the fine was warranted, but they believed this was the best way to bring closure to EPA's concerns. The Kensington Mine has paid for Clean Water Act enforcement before. The EPA said Coeur paid $18,334 in December 2006 to resolve construction storm water violations, and the company agreed to provide $90,000 toward the acquisition of a nearby wetlands conservation easement.

Court to decide over endangered polar bear status

The Department of Interior is under a court-imposed deadline on Dec. 23 to decide whether the level of protection for polar bears should remain "threatened" or be given maximum protection and be listed as "endangered." Climate scientists, biologists and more than 140 publicinterest groups chimed in to urge that polar bears be protected as an endangered species. The "threatened" designation allowed for the exemption of the greenhouse gas pollution that is blamed on accelerating global warming. Secretary Salazar has so far defended the "threatened" designation, claiming that threats to the species are only of concern in the future. Scientists predict that if greenhouse gas trends continue, two-thirds of the world's polar bears, including all the bears in Alaska, will probably be gone in 40 years and possibly well before then.

its Wednesday runs. "We'll keep doing it as long as there's pack ice," said Tim Varnadoe, an Evergreen pilot and training captain who flies the route. The ice gives the helicopter a landing option if trouble arises.

When Evergreen switched to a

When Evergreen switched to a single-engine helicopter for its weekly mail run to the island in the summer of 2009, it stopped taking passengers without the safety net of the extra engine. A steep-shored island with no room on land for a runway, Diomede can only receive air service by helicopter throughout most of the year. In winters when the pan ice permits, a runway is fashioned on the ice just offshore the island where planes can land.

While Varnadoe said Evergreen plans on eventually utilizing a twinengine helicopter that will permit more regular passenger service, as long as the single-engine craft is in play, ferrying people back and forth from Wales and Diomede will be determined by the ice conditions. With the ice cooperating Dec. 15, Diomede's teachers were able to leave the island for Christmas break and a number of patients, including an expecting mother, were able to get to Norton Sound Regional Hospital in Nome for care.

The ice so far this year, however, has been fickle. Just after last Wednesday's flight, winds took away the potential emergency landing zone for the helicopter. "We had a south wind storm last night that blew all our ice away," Ozenna said Dec. 17. Evergreen's Varnadoe also noted the change. "Usually we have good ice by now, but it's been on and off with these storms," he said "It's a day-by-day thing until we get into some really good ice."

In addition to the ice conditions, Varnadoe said the helicopter service is influenced by daylight, something that is in short supply this time of year. Varnadoe said the helicopter flights operate under visual flight rules, requiring daylight and favorable weather conditions to fly. "We don't have much time right now," he said.

Varnadoe predicted, however, that more regular passenger service should be established by mid-January when ice conditions improve. "We want to try and make it as safe as possible," he said.

While safety is always a priority, there is also frustration on the island over the stress of not being able to come and go when one chooses. Ozenna, who is also the tribal coordinator for the Native Village of Diomede, notes that this frustration is nothing new for Diomede. "We've always had, since Diomede existed, transportation issues," she said.

Ozenna said many on the island will miss medical appointments in Nome or Anchorage either because they cannot get off the island or they fear not getting back home. That fear is compounded in December when a doctor's appointment can be a prescription for spending the entire holiday season away from your family. "I think the biggest stress about transportation for me is once you leave Diomede, being stuck on mainland," Ozenna said. "You have to decide if you're going to travel, you'll probably get really frustrated trying to get home."

Florence Ahkinga, a health aide in Diomede, said she knows of one such patient who has been in Nome since July. "She's been gone with her daughter. She's going to try and come home for Christmas," she said. Ahkinga said many left for medical appointments this summer when boats were making the trip back and forth. She has missed medical appointments herself for fear of not getting back.

While people will make the trip back and forth from the island to the mainland by boat, the short journey comes with risk. The waters in the bottleneck between the Arctic and Pacific oceans can turn from calm to deadly in short order. Ahkinga said she will only take the trip by boat in good weather, especially when she travels with her children.

Ahkinga said she is happy to see the return of helicopter service, which has helped her cement plans to move to Nome to take a job at Norton Sound Health Corp. "I was waiting to hear on Evergreen [helicopter] service to turn in my application," she said. "So I'm happy to be able to get off the island."

Norton Sound Health Corp. and other entities in the region have been pushing for more regular helicopter service through the federal subsidy program dubbed the Essential Air Service. Talks had occurred between several parties including Evergreen, the federal government, the State of Alaska and the Bering Strait School District to establish who would pay what portion of the costs to establish regular helicopter passenger service to and from the island. Currently, Evergreen's contract only covers the weekly mail delivery. Passenger service, which has cost $160 for the one-way trip to Wales for years, is only provided when space, time and conditions permit.

Evergreen's Varnadoe said while Evergreen has applied for the Essential Air Service Subsidy, the process has had a few hiccups and could likely take years. "It's something that needs to be looked over a little more thoroughly," he said. "It's still an ongoing thing. We've been told it can take up to two years. Meanwhile, we're trying to do our part and get the people that need to see doctors and the pregnant women, as well as the teachers."

While visiting Washington, D.C., and top Obama administration officials, as well as the president himself, Norton Sound Health Corp. Board Chair Emily Hughes pressed for Essential Air Service for Diomede. The island's transportation concerns were at the top of a list she presented to officials during the Dec. 16 White House Tribal Nations Conference (see story on page 1).

Native Village of Diomede Tribal Coordinator Ozenna pointed out Hughes' work on behalf of the residents of Diomede. Exemplifying the problem in Diomede, Ozenna said the leadership on the island often has to miss meetings where they could plead their case, simply because they cannot travel. She hopes an ice runway will be able to be established this spring to allow travel. "If we get an ice runway, there'll be people traveling for medical, student trips, meetings. We won't miss meetings like we did for '09 and most of 2010," she said.

But in a place that is governed by weather conditions more than anything else, Ozenna said Diomede residents are used to going with the flow. "It's always like that for Diomede, though," she said. "You never get a guarantee for most everything. A lot of the people, they just live with it."

Tribal conference

Hughes is not a member of the Native Village of Diomede, she was asked to bring the message to President Obama and his staff that they need help with a long list of things, with essential passenger transportation to and from the island ranking at the top. A twin-engine helicopter that once served as a way off and back to the island is not available anymore and the replacement single-engine helicopter—due to federal aviation regulations—can often only transport passengers in emergencies.

But once off the island, getting back home becomes almost impossible, unless the sea ice forms thick enough in the spring to allow planes to land on the ice. Last Thursday, Hughes hand-delivered a letter from the village of Diomede to the president's staff asking for help from the Essential Air Service program, which subsidizes passenger airlines serving about 140 remote communities. Hughes said she passed the letter on to presidential staff before the conference began, with the promise that the letter will make it to the president's desk.

The letter also contained the plea for help with other issues: Diomeders ask for a landfill to avoid dumping waste including honey bucket contents into the ocean; a small boat harbor and regular boat service to and from Wales; the ease with which the designer drugs like Spice Diamond reach the remote island and the request for portable emergency generators.

Hughes said that she got in line at 5:30 a.m. to get a good seat and to hopefully shake President Obama's hand. And her wish was granted. Hughes filmed a clip showing Point Hope's Caroline Cannon getting a hug by Obama and then the president shook Hughes' hand as well.

President Obama in his speech addressing the tribal leaders assured his support for a United Nations declaration on indigenous civil rights and spoke of his administration's achievements in Indian Coun-Hughes said she was encouraged to hear that Obama announced more tribal consultations to keep the dialogue going. "The President spoke of the great challenges of our country and that there is still lots of work to do," Hughes said. "He also said that he wanted to make sure that we had more consultations with the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Department of the Interior and the Indian Health Services."

After the speech the assembled tribal leaders went to breakout sessions to meet with White House staff about issues like nation-to-nation relationships; education, health and community services; economic development, housing and infrastructure; tribal land, culture protection, energy and climate changes; and subsistence issues. Hughes attended the breakout session on health, education and community services, and addressed again the need for Diomede passenger service as well as other issues. "I echoed some comments heard from other leaders from the lower 48 regarding the high suicide rates as well as the need for tribal education," Hughes said. She said that as older leaders step down or die, the younger generation needs to be educated on how to run tribal councils.

Hughes said she told the staffers a whole slew of issues facing the region ranging from the need for water and sewer systems, drug problems, transportation problems, the need to incorporate traditional healing programs and she said a considerable amount of time was spent talking about the high rate of suicides among Native youth.

Overall, Hughes said she was encouraged by the steps Obama took so far to fulfill his promise of better relations between the federal government and the tribal nations. These included the signing of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act, the signing of the Tribal Law and Order Act, which provides more resources to fight crime, and drug and alcohol abuse on reservations and in Alaska and the continued development of cabinet members drafting consultation policies.

But it all takes time, Hughes says. "I have a sense that they are listening, but to change things it will take a while," Hughes said. "Changes don't happen overnight and like in any organization, it will take the cooperation of everybody.'

Also attending the second White House tribal conference were Unalakleet tribal council president Katherine Johnson, Cynthia Ahwinona for the Nome Eskimo Community and Eileen Norbert.

Search for Teller man yields no clues

By Tyler Rhodes

For the second time within a month, search and rescue teams are working in the area of Grantley Harbor between Teller and Brevig Mission to search for a Teller resident.

As of press time Dec. 21, crews had not located 22-year-old Kenneth Lee who disappeared after leaving Brevig Mission late in the night Dec. 15 by snowmachine to return home to Teller. According to Alaska State Trooper Sgt. Andrew Merrill, Lee was leaving Brevig Mission after playing basketball in the village. He said the weather was reported as clear and cold at the time. Lee was travelling alone.

Brevig Mission and Teller are separated by Grantley Harbor which freezes over in the winter, allowing snowmachine and four-wheeler travel between the two villages. A direct-line route requires travel predominately over the ice. A more circuitous route travels father inland and still requires a river crossing; however, it keeps travelers mostly on land during times when the ice conditions are dangerous. Merrill said it is unknown which trail Lee took to travel back to Teller.

Merrill said the search and rescue effort for Merrill is being led by Teller Search and Rescue and being assisted by Brevig Mission Search and Rescue. He said the known trails have been searched with no sign of Lee being encountered. An aerial search was planned after Lee's initial disappearance, but was scuttled due to weather. The region has received significant snowfall and winds since Lee's disappearance. Merrill said another aerial search was to be attempted Dec. 21. He also said an underwater camera was to be used to check open water areas in Grantley Harbor.

Rescue crews recovered the body of another Teller resident, Barbara Scholten, from the ice on Grantley Harbor Nov. 29 after she had fallen through Nov. 24 while riding on a snowmachine with Marvin Okleasik en route to Brevig Mission. Merrill recommends that people traveling in the country be on the alert for open water and file a travel plan with someone before leaving. He also recommends avoiding travel, if possible, when conditions are not favorable. "If you don't have to travel when it's dark or stormy, we recommend you don't," he said.

Shaktoolik to hold special municipal, NSEDC elections Jan. 11

By Laurie McNicholas

The City of Shaktoolik will conduct a special municipal election for two city council seats and a special election for the Shaktoolik member of the Norton Sound Economic Development Corp. board of directors on Jan. 11, reports City Clerk Rita Auliye.

The results of the regular municipal election held Oct. 5 were contested by a Shaktoolik voter because 12 questioned ballots cast by persons who were not eligible to vote were counted in the election results.

Fred Sagoonick outpolled incumbent Edgar Jackson Sr. by a vote of 63-43 for council seat C in the Oct. 5 municipal election. Myron Savetilik, who ran unopposed for council seat F, received 73 votes. Jackson currently serves as mayor of Shaktoolik. The mayor of a second-class city such as Shaktoolik is elected by and from the council.

The Oct. 5 election for Shaktoolik's NSEDC board seat resulted in a tie vote (54-54) between the only two candidates, Eugene Asicksik and incumbent Harvey Sookiayak. On Nov. 5 the Shaktoolik City Council decided not to certify the city election or the NSEDC election. City Clerk Auliye said the same candidates who competed for council seats and the NSEDC seat in the Oct. 5 elections will run in the Jan. 11 special elections.

Alaska is among several states for which pre-clearance for special municipal elections other than runoff elections is required from the U.S. Department of Justice under Section 5 of the National Voting Rights Act of 1965. When Alaska was a U.S. territory, its voter eligibility laws included a discriminatory requirement that voters know how to speak and write in English, according to Leroy Seppilu, local government specialist with the Alaska Division of Community and Regional Affairs.

Seppilu said he sent a form to the City of Shaktoolik for use in requesting pre-clearance from the Department of Justice to schedule a special municipal election. He said the department asks for 60 days to review and respond to the request, and both the request and response can be transmitted electronically.

Record snowfall hits Nome over weekend

By Tyler Rhodes

Just a few days shy of the official start of winter, Nome set a new snowfall record Dec. 19 with 6.3 inches of the white stuff.

Over the weekend of Dec. 18-19 Nome received a total of 10 inches, more than doubling the pre-weekend snowpack of nine inches. The record snowfall on Sunday easily outpaced the previous record of five inches set in 1999.

While likely ensuring a white Christmas—not that Nome was risking otherwise—the abundant and blowing snow did cause some snafus. Alaska Airlines was only able to get the morning flight from Anchorage into Nome on Saturday, cancelling the other two flights as an ice fog hung about the city before the snow started to fly in the evening. Sunday's morning flight to Kotzebue and Nome was cancelled while the mid-day flight only was able to complete the Nome leg of the journey. The evening flight was able to land in both Kotzebue and Nome a few minutes behind schedule.

The weather also caused the cancellation of a make-up pet vaccination and licensing clinic that was scheduled Dec. 19. The clinic was planned as an extra chance for those who were unable to make it to a previous clinic due to bad weather in early December. A make-up for the make-up clinic will be scheduled after the holidays.

gravel sits. The tanks are situated on top of the gravel. DeRuyter also said the area includes some steel and concrete buffering, although he was uncertain on how the containment area was specifically configured. He said all the snow will be removed from immediately outside the containment area to make sure fuel has not escaped. "We're going to verify that before we leave." he said.

Snow and ice are also present within the containment area. As of Dec. 16 the response effort was still focused on removing fuel that could be pumped directly into the two tanks. Responders were developing a plan to remove contaminated snow and ice from the containment area to separate the oil from the water.

One DEC representative is on scene. DeRuyter said a team from the Alaska Energy Authority, that was already in Unalakleet on other business, is conducting the cleanup.

DeRuyter said the wide discrepancy between the initial 1,000-gallon reported on Dec. 12 and the 10,930 gallons estimated on Dec. 16 was the matter of a quick guess at the outset of the spill compared to a detailed accounting made in the days that followed. He said the larger figure was arrived at after calculating the amount of fuel that was initially in the large tank before the ill-fated transfer and contrasting it with the amount of fuel left after the spill.

DeRuyter said he could not comment on any potential penalty or cleanup costs for the electric cooperative. "All of that is under investigation," he said.

Christmas spirit:

He sold trees and saved the chicks

By Sandra L. Medearis

Now a school bus driver, chauffeuring the kiddies to future opportunities or not, George Foot used to be in a much "greener" business still: selling lots of bushy, glossygreen, fresh Christmas trees.

For half a dozen years or more, Foot ordered up his stock—Grand pines, Scotch pines, "Doug" firs, other firs—as early as October when trees started the march to lots for short-term adoptions just before Christmas. Shippers culled and shipped most of Foot's trees from farms in Montana and around Pocatello, Idaho. Over the years, Foot supplied living rooms in Pocatello, Spokane, Wash., Casa Grande, Ariz., and Butte, Mont. The business got into full gear just after Thanksgiving.

Foot learned a lot about trees, he said. For his own home, he would choose grand firs from the Pacific Northwest, with their fragrant glossy needles that do not drop to the rug as quickly as those from other cut trees. It grows from British Columbia, to Montana, to California, and is a top seller in Montana and Idaho.

"After the first deep freeze," Foot explained, "the tree calls its sap down to the roots and sets its needles. That's why they stay on a lot longer."

Connoisseurs of fine holiday trees would want to stay away from trees from warmer coastal areas and the popular Scotch pines, if they wanted to leave the vacuum cleaner in the closet. Trees from a warmer climate do not hang on to their needles as firmly. Vendors paint trees to set the needles, Foot said. "You pretty much have to paint the Scotch pines."

For the most part, selling Christmas trees was a warm and fuzzy business. Then there was that guy, Foot recalls, with the grumpy look and the rocky vocabulary, that ran into his lot several days after Christmas when Foot was packing up his leftover trees.

"%^&%$%$$#@##$, the guy told Foot." The ^&^%%$#$#$#$%^ family is showing up. I gotta get a tree!

Then what?

"I just gave him a tree," Foot laughed.

With that out of the way, what did Foot do with his unsold trees? Near one sales lot, there were several pheasant and grouse farms where he could recycle his trees. In fact, the trees, in a way became "greener" as they dried out. The unwanted trees saved the lives of pheasant chicks.

"We put them in there so the little ones would have a place to hide," Foot said. "The adult pheasants in big gangs kill the young. It's the darnedest thing.

"When I went to that one farmer, he had 1,000 chicks, but he said he would lose a third to predatory activity. 'It's about pecking order,' "he said."

Research shows there are about 15,000 Christmas tree farms in the United States. The cut-tree Christmas lot business dwindled after someone got the idea to organize "you-picks, and the idea took off," Foot said. "They give the guy a little bow saw, and he takes his family out for the activity to cut their own Christmas tree."

One scientist's hobby: Recreating the ice age

By Arthur Max, AP

CHERSKY, Russia (AP)—Wild horses have returned to northern Siberia. So have musk oxen, hairy beasts that once shared this icy land with woolly mammoths and sabertoothed cats. Moose and reindeer are here, and may one day be joined by Canadian bison and deer.

Later, the predators will come - Siberian tigers, wolves and maybe leopards.

Russian scientist Sergey Zimov is reintroducing these animals to the land where they once roamed in millions to demonstrate his theory that filling the vast emptiness of Siberia with grass-eating animals can slow global warming.

"Some people have a small garden. I have an ice age park. It's my hobby," says Zimov, smiling through his graying beard. His true profession is quantum physics.

Climate change is felt most sharply in the Arctic, where temperatures are warming faster than anywhere else on the planet. Most climate scientists say human activity, especially industrial pollution and the byproducts of everyday living like home heating and driving cars, is triggering an unnatural warming of the Earth. On Monday, negotiators representing 194 countries open a two-week conference in Cancun, Mexico, on reducing greenhouse gases to slow the pace of climate change.

Zimov is trying to recreate an ecosystem that disappeared 10,000 years ago with the end of the ice age, which closed the 1.8 million-year Pleistocene era and ushered in the global climate roughly as we know it

He believes herds of grazers will turn the tundra, which today supports only spindly larch trees and shrubs, into luxurious grasslands. Tall grasses with complex root systems will stabilize the frozen soil, which is now thawing at an ever-increasing rate, he says.

Herbivores keep wild grass short and healthy, sending up fresh shoots through the summer and autumn. Their manure gives crucial nourishment. In winter, the animals trample and flatten the snow that otherwise would insulate the ground from the cold air. That helps prevent the frozen ground, or permafrost, from thawing and releasing powerful greenhouse gases. Grass also reflects more sunlight than forests, a further damper to global warming.

It would take millions of animals to change the landscape of Siberia and effectively seal the permafrost. But left alone, Zimov argues, the likes of caribou, buffalo and musk oxen multiply quickly. Wherever they graze "new pastures will appear ... beautiful grassland."

The project is being watched not only by climate scientists but by paleontologists and environmentalists who have an interest in "rewilding."

"This is a very interesting experiment," said Adrian Lister, of the Nat-

Christmas on Michigan farm holds special memories

By Amber Ryan

Alyssa Heers moved to Nome from McBain, Michigan seven years ago with her husband Bradley and their two wonderful children, Vivienne and Jacob. Christmas is a special time for her family. It has been different spending the holidays away from Michigan. There are no trees in Nome and she is far from family, but it is always a joyous and memorable time of year despite the differences.

As a youngster, Alyssa and her family would pick a tree from their tree farm behind their house. Her two brothers and sister would all help to decide which tree would be the tree to decorate. One year her family made ornaments out of eggshells. They would poke two holes on each end of the egg and blow out the egg. "We would decorate the egg very carefully. My mom has three egg ornaments left from the dozen that we made.'

A nativity scene was set up in the house every year. "We rearranged it every hour. We all wanted it set up differently. I thought Baby Jesus should go in a certain spot, but my siblings wanted Baby Jesus in the spot they thought would be best

On Christmas Eve, Alyssa and her two siblings were allowed to open one present. One of her brother's birthday is on Christmas Eve. He got to open two presents." We would get up in the morning by six and my brothers had already been up for hours. They would be asleep underneath the stockings, waiting for Christmas to arrive!" Speaking of stockings, Alyssa and everyone else in the house would receive huge oranges at the toe of their stockings. She does that every year for her children. "It kind of helps to fill up the stocking!"

After waking her parents, their dad would tell them to milk the cows and feed the chickens before they could open their presents. Alyssa and her siblings would respond, "No! No! Don't make us do it! Not today!" Their dad never made them do chores on Christmas; he would do them. After he finished, they would wander over to their grandparents' house for Christmas dinner. The main dishes of the night were ham and turkey. "My favorite part of the dinner was a bowl of olives. We would all eat the entire three jars of olives when we first got there." Alyssa says, "My favorite part of going over for Christmas dinner was seeing all our cousins, aunts and uncles. It was always exciting because we don't see them all the time."

"My favorite present was actually a present for my mom. It was a horse and we hid him for two days. His name is Jazz and he is still alive today. We got him when I was ten."

Alyssa's grandmother would get them chocolate letters from the Dutch store. "Since my name starts with an 'A' I would get a huge chocolate letter 'A'. My grandma still sends me my chocolate letter."

This year Vivienne and Jacob will open their stockings and then wake up Alyssa and Brad. For dinner they are going to a friend's house and will rock and roll to Christmas music all Alyssa still believes in Santa Claus!

Distinguish between naughty and nice "Santa sites"

BBB's Checklist: Parents, Ensure Safety and Security Online

Children aren't just writing letters to Santa the old-fashion way; some are visiting St. Nick online and emailing him their wish lists. With over 60 domain names registered in the name of Santa Claus, parents need to be cautious of possible Grinch companies.

"Though most Santa sites operate with the best intentions, it is important for parents to screen websites to ensure children aren't being targeted by unethical individuals or at risk for identity theft," said Robert W.G. Andrew, CEO of Better Business Bureau serving Alaska, Oregon and Western Washington.

BBB offers a checklist to help parents review Santa sites:

√What information does the website request? A legitimate Santa site might ask for names and basic contact information—like home or email addresses—to send correspondence. Be wary of sites requesting superfluous data beyond what is needed to participate.

√ Who should manage the account? Most children writing to Santa don't have an e-mail address yet. Setup a temporary e-mail account for Santa correspondence or use a parent's e-mail address. To avoid the risk of unwholesome content, a trusted adult should screen all communications and ensure the site does not contain hyperlinks with inappropriate content.

√How does the site use collected information? Make sure the site has a privacy policy explaining information collection practices; including who is seeking the data, how it will be used and whether it will be shared with third parties.

 $\sqrt{\text{Is there a way to reach Santa directly? Somewhere on the site, the}}$ company should list its full business name and at least two forms of contact information—such as a phone number, e-mail address and physical address (and "The North Pole" doesn't count). Try calling the company before making purchases.

√ Is it free or does it cost a fee? Certain Santa sites claim to be free, while others ask for payment—between $5 and $50. If paying online, make sure the payment page is secure with an "s" in "https" before the web address. Never wire money.

√ When can children expect correspondence? Find out when letters should be received—typically by Christmas. Have a plan in case Santa doesn't follow through.

√Where can consumers get information about children's advertising? Check with the Children's Online Privacy Protection Act and Children's Advertising Review Unit (CARU) for guidance. Visit www.bbb.org for more tips.

health of people and the environment. The regulations announced Friday are aimed to reduce airborne mercury pollution from the mines to about 1,200 pounds a year, a 77 percent reduction from 2007 levels, said the U.S. Environmental Protection

The rule represents the first national standard for mercury air emissions from gold mines, the seventh largest source of such pollution in the country. The rule affects mines in Alaska, California, Colorado, Montana, Nevada, South Dakota and Washington. After being released into the atmosphere from the mines, mercury transforms into toxic methylmercury in the environment and builds up in the food chain. The emissions have been suspected of making some fish and waterfowl in Idaho and Utah so polluted with methylmercury they are unsafe to eat. Children and women of childbearing age are most at risk. Existing and new mines will have three years to install pollution control equipment — mainly carbon absorber beds — to meet the new standard.

Anchorage student escapes abduction attempt

A sixth-grade student reported that a man attempted to abduct her as she walked to Clark Middle School on Tuesday morning.

According to Anchorage police, a man in a silver or gray SUV asked if there was a school nearby, then invited the girl to get in his vehicle. The girl declined and ran away, but slipped and fell. The suspect then ran his SUV over the victim's foot. The girl described the suspect as a lightskinned black male in his early twenties. He has a thin build, short hair and no facial hair and was wearing a beige or light tan hoodie. The SUV is described as silver or gray with tinted windows. Police searched the area but were unsuccessful in locating a suspect or vehicle matching the description. Three incidents reported in January were strikingly similar. In two of the cases, the victims were struck by the vehicle but neither was seriously injured.

Coast Guard seeking public's input on shipping traffic

The Coast Guard last week sent out a questionnaire to stakeholders in coastal areas to gather input for a port access route study. As a result of global warming, there is potential for increase of vessel traffic in the Bering Strait and hence there is a need to consider updating ship routing. The questions asked include a description of current navigational hazards, traffic density and a description of the most cost effective way to implement new routing measures. The Coast Guard conducts the study to deal with concerns about congestion and potential for collisions, spills, and response to spills and disabled ships. The comment period ends May 9, 2011. More information is available from Donald Fore, Project Management, USACE Alaska District and donald.b.fore@usace.army.mil

State sues to overturn NMFS decision on Western Steller Sea Lions

The State of Alaska last week filed suit in the U.S. District Court for Alaska against the National Marine Fisheries Service over the agency's decision to significantly curtail fishing in the western Aleutian Islands out of concern for Steller sea lions. The state voiced economical concerns and argues that NMFS's conclusion to restrict fishing would not be supported by the best available scientific information. State officials also believe that NMFS committed numerous procedural violations, which had the effect of limiting the opportunity for public and expert comments.

Alaska joins in settlement in Dannon advertising case

The state of Alaska and 36 other states have jointly filed settlements with The Dannon Company, Inc., regarding deceptive advertising for its Activia and DanActive products. The company will make a $21 million payment, the largest ever in a multistate settlement with a food producer related to consumer protection. Alaska's share will be $425,000. The attorneys general alleged that Dannon made unlawful health claims about Activia yogurt and DanActive, a yogurt drink, that were not substantiated by reliable scientific evidence.

States announce $13.25 million settlement with DI-RECTV

Acting Attorney General Richard Svobodny announced last week that Alaska and 48 other states and the District of Columbia have reached a settlement with DIRECTV to resolve claims of deceptive and unfair sales practices against the satellite television provider. DIRECTV will pay $13.25 million to the states to settle the consumer protection complaints. Alaska will receive $185,000. DIRECTV also agreed to pay restitution to consumers and to alter its business practices in the future.

Mackey, Redington win first sled dog races of the season

Last weekend, four-time Iditarod champion Lance Mackey won the Sheep Mountain 150 sled dog race for the third time. The Fairbanks musher and his team of 10 dogs arrived after the 150-mile race at the Sheep Mountain Lodge on Sunday in under 25 hours. Jake Berkowitz was second, and last year's winner Jessica Hendricks of Two Rivers came in third. Mackey won $1,750 for first place.

In Big Lake, Ryan Redington – grandson of Iditarod founder Joe Redington — won the two-day Alaska Excursions sled dog race that took 38 teams over a 44-mile trail each day. Redington won $3,000 for first place. Second was Paul Gebhard, followed by Hugh Neff.

Zimov's research on permafrost, greenhouse gas emissions and mammoth archaeology has attracted world scientists to his laboratories, a small cluster of cabins and a tiny chapel on a rocky bluff above a channel of the Kolyma River. A 20bed barge is used for field trips in summer, and a $100,000 hovercraft is on order. Zimov sometimes uses an old Russian tank to bring supplies from the Chinese border, 1,200 miles away.

Part of the station's attraction and deterrence — is its remoteness. It is 4,000 miles and eight time zones east of Moscow. The nearby town of Chersky, with some 5,000 people, has few amenities, and the nearest city, Yakutsk, is a 4-1/2 hour flight. Many researchers, particularly Americans, prefer to work in Alaska or northern Canada, which are more accessible.

Nome boys make perfect debut

The Nome boys basketball team won its first two games of the season at home, dispatching Galena Friday and Saturday at Nome-Beltz.

Tim Sullivan led the way for Nanook scorers in Friday's 86-78 victory for Nome, shooting 7-10 from three-point range on his way to a total of 28. By the fourth quarter Nome held a 26-point lead before Galena staged a late-game comeback. It was too little, too late, however, as Nome went the distance for their first win of the season.

Nome came out hot again on Saturday night, with a 25-11 first quarter. The Nanooks came away with the win 68-53. Saturday night was Nathan Blandford's turn to shine, pulling down nine rebounds and scoring 19 points. Tall man Christian Leckband proved pivotal in the fourth quarter after seeing little playing time mid-game due to foul trouble. Leckband scored eight of his 14 points in the fourth, helping fend off another Galena charge. Galena was also hurt by the loss of its lead player, Wayne Holmberg, who was sidelined in the second half with a migraine headache.

The wins over the weekend put the Nanook boys' winning streak at home at 34 games. The boys have not lost at home since the first game of the 2006-2007 season.

The boys will next play at the ACS tournament in Anchorage Dec. 30 - Jan. 1.

Galena girls get the upperhand

Facing a tough opponent right out of the gate, the Lady Nanook basketball team struggled in their first two games of the season played on the road in Galena.

Nome held the lead for three quarters in the season opener Friday, but was unable to stop a Lady Hawk comeback led by Jenna Buchanan who put up seven points in the fourth. Buchanan had 23 total for the game, leading all scorers. Galena won the game 59-52.

Nome's Dylan Johnson led the Lady Nanooks with 17 points, nine rebounds and four steals. Elizabeth Luce notched 11 points.

Saturday's game was more lopsided as the Lady Hawks put on a more physical performance, winning 45-27. Galena's Buchanan again led all scorers with 16 points. Nome was led by Devynn Johnson who scored six and grabbed 11 rebounds.

The Lady Nanooks will next play over the Christmas break at the ACS tournament held in Anchorage Dec. 30-Jan. 1.

The next basketball action to take place at home will be the Nome Subway Showdown Jan. 6-8.

Christmas at Trophy Lake: It was one of the best Christmas Eves ever

By Tyler Rhodes

Approximately 15 years ago, Char Keehn found her nirvana on Christmas Eve.

In a treed corner along the frozen shore of Trophy Lake in the Kenai Peninsula's Caribou Hills, Keehn spent the few precious sunny hours that day with many of her closest companions in the world. While the sun set the fresh snow crystals to sparkling under a cobalt blue sky, Keehn set about cooking the crew a meal while her friends lounged in the snow. She happily chatted with her friends as she prepared lunch, never expecting or needing a word in re-

Keehn was more than happy to soak in the sunshine and marvel at the incredible scenery with her dog team that had joyfully delivered her to the lake. "It was probably the best Christmas Eve I've ever had," she said while sipping coffee Sunday at her neighbor's house in Tripple Creek, just north of Nome. "It was definitely the most beautiful, and with my own dogs."

Keehn, who has now lived and mushed dogs in Nome for years, was still learning the ropes of handling a dog team during the time of that magical Christmas Eve. After a brief exposure to the lifestyle and sport while living in Talkeetna, Keehn had moved to Kasilof and found herself in a neighborhood in the early 1990s where she was able to rub shoulders with some of mushing's biggest names. She was soon helping out in Tim Osmar's dog lot and would often see the Seavey family and other long-distance mushers out on the trails that crisscrossed the Caribou Hills. "It was a fun neighborhood. It was like here's little beginner Char, and here go the big guys," she said.

Keehn had earlier acquired three Siberian huskies and eventually grew her team with a dog she had got off a musher who wasn't having much success with her. That dog, Mama Einstein, was bred with one of Osmar's dogs. Osmar would keep the "athletes" from the litters while Keehn would take the dogs more suited to recreational mushing. Eventually she had her team of seven, a number Keehn said was perfect for a small-statured person like herself. "I just wasn't good on a sled," she said.

Keehn must have been good enough. During the winter she would run Osmar's puppy teams, alternating with trips with her own dogs. The run to Trophy Lake was a route with which Keehn was well familiar. As the winter days shortened and the solstice approached, Keehn noticed one spot on the lake in particular. "I spotted out this little cove on the lake on the north side," she said. "I noticed in December that was the last place that had sun. So that's where I went up.'

With the celebration with her human family slated for evening,

Keehn used the daylight hours of Christmas Eve for a run to that sunny spot with her own dogs. She hitched up her leaders Glennie and Triumph along with Mama Einstein, Victory, Tahoe, Ruby and Tallac. She also brought along a guest canine, Pistol, to round out an eight-dog team for the day. With a fresh blanket of snow coating the trees and trails, Keehn took off before light to let the dogs run in the dark, which they loved, and to make the most of the daylight in her selected spot. After the 10-mile run she set up camp, started the dogs' broth and just marveled at the scenery. The boughs of the tall spruces surrounding the lake hung with snow as if they were frosted. As Keehn and her team enjoyed this gorgeous corner of the world that felt as if it were all their own that Christmas Eve, the sun painted the scene in marvelous tones. "The colors were so incredible," she said. "When the sun went down, the snow turned pinkish and even that violet color. It was nirvana.'

As darkness descended and other obligations called, Keehn packed up camp and headed the team back toward civilization. Despite the beautiful setting they had to leave behind, it was a happy return. As she mushed back past the Osmar's property, which was completely aglow with Christmas lights and decorations, an eruption of howls greeted her passing. To Keehn's ears, it might as well have been a full choir belting out a Christmas favorite. "We came mushing in and there was this chorus of dogs," she said.

Keehn keeps a photo she took of that snow-covered lake and her dog team. While the photo is easy for her to find 15 years after the fact, her memory of what she dubbed Christmas Cove is move vivid and readily accessible. The trip embodies a period in her life that was filled with the wonder of traveling through amazing country with wonderful companions. "No matter whatever I do, it will never ever top those years with the sled dogs," she said. "That era, it was magical."

"Most of the Arctic is in Russia, and yet most of the Arctic research isn't," said Max Holmes, of Woods Hole Research Center in Massachusetts, director of the Polaris Project, which has sent undergraduates to the station for the last three summers.

Zimov started the park with a herd of 40 Yakutian horses, a semi-wild breed with a handsomely long mane that is raised by Yakuts and other native people for their meat. Short, sturdy and broad-backed, they survive harsh Siberian winters with the help of a furry hide, thick layers of fat and the ability to paw through 3 feet of snow to forage.

Of his first herd, Zimov said 15 were killed by wolves and bears, 12 died from eating wild hemlock that grows in the park, and two slipped through the perimeter and made their way back some 600 miles to their original pastures.

But he bought more. Now the horses have learned to avoid poisonous plants and to resist predators. Over the last three years, more colts were born and survived than horses

The challenge is to find the right balance between grazers and predators, and how to help his animals get through their first winters.

His workers still give occasional buckets of grain to the horses to supplement their diet with salt. About half the horses come regularly to the cabin where a caretaker stays yearround. The other half are rarely seen except for their tracks.

Zimov also has had problems with the moose that he brought inside his enclosure. Moose still live in small numbers in surrounding forests, and the males jump back and forth over the 6-foot-high fence.

In September he traveled to a nature reserve on Wrangel Island, about five hours by boat across the East Siberia Sea, and brought back six 4month-old musk oxen. One died a few weeks later. The others are kept in a small enclosure and fed hay until they can fend for themselves.

His objective is to see whether a thriving population of grazing animals will regenerate grasslands that disappeared long ago, which would slow and even halt the accelerating pace of permafrost thaw. So far, he says, the results are encouraging.

Today he has 70 animals in the park. He wants thousands to restock Siberia. To bring 1,000 bison from North America would cost $1 million, Zimov says, a small price to pay.

"If permafrost melts, 100 gigatons of carbon will be released this century," he said. "What's $1 million?

A doctor's note for Santa for upcoming pre-flight exam

ByBob Lawrence, MD Alaska Family Doctor

Rumor has it that Santa Claus has a personal doctor; his name is Claude Galen, an elder elf and medical director for the North Pole Medical Center (NPMC). Reportedly, he has taken care of Santa and Mrs. Claus for many years.

Recently Dr. Galen sent a plea for help. His advice is great for Santa as well as all those who wish to be healthy this Christmas season and throughout the year. Here is what Dr. Galen wrote:

"To whom it may concern, I need your help.

Santa Claus was seen today for a pre-flight exam in preparation for his upcoming Christmas travel.

I am happy to report that Mr. Claus is cleared for full duty without restrictions in the distribution of gifts on Christmas Eve. He is in good health overall with no deficits that would put him at risk for high-altitude flight, repetitive lifting, or intermittent climbing.

However, Mr. Claus has developed concerning changes in his weight and lab work that put his health at risk. Specifically, his waist circumference has grown to above 40 inches and his body mass index has risen above 30, indicating medical obesity. Not unexpectedly, his blood pressure has risen into a pre-hypertension range with regular readings above 130/85 mmHg. His recent blood work also shows a concerning fall in his HDL cholesterol (good cholesterol) and a rise in the harmful triglycerides. Furthermore, his fasting blood sugar is above 100 mg/dL and his last hemoglobin AIc is 6.1%, suggesting his blood sugars have been running high for at least three months. We call this constellation of findings the "dysmetabolic syndrome."

If not corrected, the dysmetabolic syndrome can lead to diabetes, heart attacks, strokes, or kidney failure. Any one of these diagnoses would make it more difficult, if not impossible, for Mr. Claus to obtain the necessary Airmen Medical Certificate required by the Federal Aviation Administration for operation of manned aircraft in U.S. airspace.

Here is where you can help. I have advised Mr. Claus to monitor his intake of simple sugars, increase his intake of healthy fats, and increase his physical activity.

If you choose to leave a snack for Santa this year, consider leaving fresh fruit or vegetables. If you would like to leave cookies, make your cookies with real butter, as opposed to shortening (which is high in artery damaging trans-fatty acids), and add lots of healthy nuts, like walnuts which are high in artery-cleansing omega-3-fatty acids. If you leave egg nog, dilute it by half with milk and skip the whipped cream. It will be just as tasty with a lower level of simple carbohydrates.

Whole-grain crackers with cheese also make a healthy snack for Santa. However, please refrain from putting out reindeer sausage. This is very unsettling to the flight crew. Please note that Santa Claus cannot consume any alcohol on Christmas Eve due to strict FAA regulations and the many duties of the season, which require mental stamina.

Thank you for your help in this matter. With your help we can provide Mr. Claus with healthy food choices this Christmas Eve. By doing so, we will promote his good work in the future by lowering his risk of developing serious disease.

Most respectfully yours, Claude Galen, MD North Pole Medical Center North Pole

New Norton Sound Regional Hospital opens in 2012, but Elders may have to stay behind!

Kendra Takak, courtesy of Norton Sound Health Corporation

Construction of the new Norton Sound Regional Hospital is in full swing. The exterior is enclosed and the contractor will be working inside all winter on framing, plumbing, electrical rough-in, sheet rock and much more. Construction will continue throughout 2011 and 2012. The project is scheduled to be complete in November 2012. A group of concerned community members have asked "does the new facility include long term care beds for elders?" Unfortunately, the answer is no. When the Indian Health Service (IHS) approved the New Hospital Project in 2006 they did not have the authority to construct long term care facilities. And when construction funds for the New Hospital Project became available through the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act (ARRA) in 2009, IHS still did not have the authority. It was not until March 2010 when Congress re-authorized the Indian Health Care Improvement Act that IHS finally received legal authority for elder care programs throughout Indian Country such as long term care, assisted living, hospice, home health care, etc. But while gaining the authority was a milestone, Congress has not yet provided any funding for American Indian / Alaska Native elder care projects.

Existing Elder Care Facility: NSHC operates a 15-bed long-term care facility, Quyanna Care Center at the existing hospital. QCC continues to maximize the quality of life for residents living in the Bering Strait Region who have made QCC their home. The facility provides quality care in a safe, home-like environment, but in a building that is admittedly starting to show its age. It is staffed twenty-four hours a day, seven days a week. Residents have direct access to physicians, nurses, critical care equipment, and support services in the existing hospital. For example, the Emergency and Radiology Departments are just a short wheel-chair ride away.

QCC is one of thirteen tribal nursing homes in the United States. Within the last two years the staff has received two National Quality Service awards. The success of QCC can be attributed to a dedicated multidisciplinary team of caring professionals, medical staff and the family members of QCC residents.

Individuals in our region are living longer ranging from 78 to 100 years old and the availability of long term care in the region is essential, as evidenced by the constant waiting list of elders seeking to be admitted to QCC. And for both the elders and their families, the ability for these seniors to live in Nome is much preferred vs. having to relocate to a facility in Anchorage or Fairbanks.

The Problem: If a new QCC facility is not constructed at the New Hospital Site, NSHC will have to leave QCC residents at the old facility when all other hospital related programs and support services move to the new hospital in late 2012 or early 2013. The new hospital is over a mile from the existing hospital. It will be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to maintain QCC at its current location without jeopardizing quality of care. Maintaining QCC at the old hospital building would also result in increased staffing/operational costs for both the QCC and hospital programs, as well as overall increased facilities management/utility costs

For example, elders would have to be transported via ambulance for even routine appointments such as eye care, dental, or physical therapy. Transport would also be required for special procedures like x-ray. Emergent and even non-emergent transfer of elders to the Hospital Inpatient Department, or the emergency medevac of an elder to Anchorage would also take longer since The City of Nome recently relocated the Public Safety Building to the east side of town. According to Angie Gorn, Vice President of Hospital Services, each and every time an elder is transported creates an opportunity for safety and health problems due to inclement weather and increased risk of slip or fall injuries. Unnecessary transferring and moving of frail elders from bed to vehicle, to exam room and back to the old facility is also stressful for the elder and time consuming for staff. Physicians would have to travel by vehicle to the old hospital facility for regular daily checks on the elders that they can currently do by simply walking down the hall. Having to travel back and forth across town is not an efficient use of their time.

In addition, meals and laundry would need to be transported back and forth between the two facilities. And finally, there is the additional cost to simply heat and maintain the old building for a small number of occupants. NSHC Management, the NSHC Board, and hospital provider staff all agree that leaving the QCC elders in the old hospital building after the new hospital opens will create a bad situation.

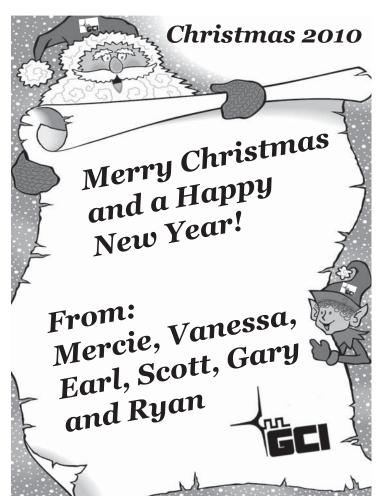

The Strategy: Since there appears to be no real chance that IHS will be able to add long-term care beds to the New Hospital Project, NSHC has developed their own strategy to design and construct an 18 bed QCC addition to the east end of the new hospital. The vision is to provide a state-of-the-art facility that is culturally appropriate, with a comfortable, family friendly atmosphere. The goal is to complete the new QCC Addition at the same time as the new hospital.

The NSHC Board has committed $910,000 of their own funds toward the project. NSHC has also secured a commitment from the Denali Commission for approximately $560,000. According to Jay Farmwald, a project manager with DOWL HKM who is working on both the New Hospital and QCC Projects, the pad for the new QCC facility has already been completed, foundation piles have been procured and are in Nome ready to be driven, and detailed design is underway.

If construction starts in 2011 and is completed in 2012 the total cost to design, construct and equip a new facility is estimated to be $13,335,000.

The project is being designed by Kumin Associates, the same architect who designed the new hospital. According to Angie Barr at Kumin, the new QCC addition will incorporate current technology, and be a more safe and accessible facility compared to the existing QCC. The new facility will also have more common areas, activity and support space. And the views from the new QCC will be breathtaking, which should help remind the elders of home as they look out on the sea and the tundra from their windows.

The current funding shortfall is $11,865,000. Capital costs per square foot for the new facility will be significantly reduced by constructing it concurrent with the new hospital. According to project staff, it is estimated that the baseline cost to construct a new QCC facility will increase by $3M if construction is delayed until after the new hospital is completed, plus $500K for every year of delay due to inflation.

NSHC has requested that the State of Alaska include funds necessary to complete this important project for the entire Bering Strait region in the FY2012 Capital Budget. There is precedent for State funding; $18.5M was included in last year's capital budget for Long Term Care projects in Kotzebue and Bethel.

Foster's Report

By Rep. Neal Foster Season's greetings!

The first round of building a new state budget has played out even though the legislature has yet to convene. That's because Governor Sean Parnell did what state law requires him to do: unveil an operating and capital budget by December 15. It adds up to $11.1 billion in total funds. Of that, $1.6 billion is for capital spending; the rest pays for operating expenditures.

A public budget is more than numbers. It is an expression of policy, of what we want to do as a people and where we want to go. As such, the governor showcased an important topic: energy. He proposed spending $65.7 million for a Susitna hydroelectric project, the first installment of five annual payments that add up to $162.6 million. This massive work will help more than half the state's population that live in the Railbelt and is designed to help Alaska derive half of its energy needs from renewable resources by 2025.

The governor's energy plan also has $25 million for a renewable energy grant fund, $25 million for a popular weatherization program, $160 million to reimburse Trans Canada for work to help build a 48inch-wide pipeline to transport North Slope natural gas to markets in the Lower 48, and $5.5 million for developing a "bullet line," a smaller pipeline for in-state gas. Whether we can afford or need all three major works like the Susitna dam, a big gas pipeline, and a bullet line or whether a combination of two of them is more appropriate are questions I hope to explore during the session that starts January 18, 2011. It may be pointed out that when power costs go down in places like Anchorage and Fairbanks, state support for power cost equalization, an energyrelated program that benefits rural Alaska, goes up due to a formula that drives funding.

The governor's proposed budget also supports adding nearly $2.3 million for 15 new village public safety officers statewide, $7.4 million to prevent domestic violence and sexual assault, $42.3 million for the village safe water and sewer program, $60 million for municipal revenue sharing, and nearly $20 million for fixing up the top 14 schools on the state school major maintenance list.

Among capital budget items Governor Parnell has targeted for the Bering Strait region are $1,250,000 for the proposed Nome-to-Fairbanks road known as the Western Access Project and money for various school repairs, armory upgrades, and other public works improvements. For more information on this, please call my office at 1-800-478-3789.

Are you fresh out of high school and looking for an exciting job?

The Alaska State House is looking for a few good men and women from across the state to serve as pages during the upcoming legislative session, from the second week of January through adjournment, April 17. The pay is $3,073 a month and includes health care and retirement benefits. Pages help make everything in the legislature run smoothly. They relay messages, letters, legislation, and more from legislators to and from Capitol offices and state agencies. They're on call seven days a week and must have a driver's license to drive a legislative van. The hours can be long, but the work can be hugely rewarding as one learns how the legislature works and meets scores of interesting people from across the state. The deadline to apply is December 31, 2010. A resume and driving record may be mailed, faxed, or sent via email to: Rep. Craig Johnson, House Rules Committee Chairman, 716 West 4th Avenue, Suite 640 Anchorage, Alaska 99501 Fax: (907) Email:

For the past few weeks they have been raising money for Smile Train, a charity that provides free cleft lip and cleft palate surgery to poor children all over the world. They volunteered many hours soliciting donations from family and neighbors, selling baked goods and craft items.

I challenged each of my five Language Arts classes to raise $250 for Smile Train, which is the cost of a single surgery. Our amazing students went above and beyond this goal. We raised a whopping $2,117!

Through our students' efforts, eight children in the world's most impoverished countries will have a second chance at life. Never doubt the power of a small army of 12- and 13vear-olds to be a force for good in the world. It truly is a season for giving.

My family and I would like to wish everyone a very Merry Christmas and Happy New Year. This year has been a great year for us and we hope that this year was a notable year for all of you. As we reflect on 2010, we hope you will join us in being thankful for our blessings. May the dawning of this New Year fill our lives with new hopes, open up new horizons, and bring for us promises of brighter tomorrows. May you all have a great New Year.

Legislative Health Caucus Behavioral Health Forum

I am very pleased with the outcome of the Behavioral Health forum "Hearing from the People," which was hosted by the Legislative Health Caucus on December 10 in Anchorage at the State Legislature building. This was a great opportunity for rural Alaskans to discuss behavioral issues with lawmakers, state agencies and various community representatives.

Several communities participated via both video and teleconference. We heard from individuals and organizations across the state including Kotlik, Chevak, Emmonak, Barrow, Nome, Kiana, Unalaska, Kodiak, Dillingham, Sitka, and Juneau. Many important issues were addressed. We heard from the Kotlik Natural Helpers, a program designed to encourage use of traditional values for those coping with difficult times and the UA Wellness program in Emmonak, which stressed the importance of healing and asks for continued program funding. These programs have proven to be effective in suicide prevention and other mental health disorders. We also heard plans for the Residential Substance Abuse Treatment/Suicide Prevention program in Nome. This project is in the planning stage for using the old hospital building once the new hospital is occupied in the fall of 2012.

Regrettably, we also were reminded of the lack of mental health programs and services that are very much needed throughout Alaska. Hope Community Resources with offices in Kodiak, Barrow and Juneau and the Chevak Kashunamiut Schools shared their experiences in their need for a state Mental Health Model and higher level of counseling services in rural areas.

Also discussed at the health caucus was the topic of Medicaid coverage and the limits in coverage provided for those who use the service. Many of my constituents depend on Medicaid coverage, and I will encourage my fellow lawmakers to consider new avenues in delivering additional medical services during legislation.

Furthermore, we very much appreciated hearing of the new and inspiring strategies that have been used by some Alaskan groups in improvement of mental health. For instance, we learned that the SEARHC hospital in Sitka uses cultural art as mental health therapy. The Media Action group from Kodiak/Nicolai presented their research-based link between story-telling and mental health, and how mental health providers can utilize that link for effective mental health programming. Participating in traditional customs and embracing cultural ways strengthens values and promotes stronger and healthier lives, many times reducing suicide, alcoholism, drug abuse, domestic violence and other social issues.

We also were enlightened by the requests for state-funded research on essential vitamins and minerals, specifically Vitamin D, and how it plays a key role in maintaining healthy mental and physical conditions. Due to the lack of daylight in Alaska during the winter months and a diet in non-traditional foods, large numbers of people become deficient in central nutrients resulting in depression and other mental disorders. Scientific studies would be beneficial in this area.

Again, I am pleased with the turnout in rural Alaska's participation in this very important dialogue with state officials. There will be additional forums held in the future and we would like to hear more about the success rate and new ideas and strategies in behavioral health programs in your community. Thank you very much to the participants in the Legislative Health Caucus Behavioral Health forum. Your voice makes a great impact in our communities.

Nome Public Safety Building

The City of Nome held a Grand Opening ceremony and reception for the new Public Safety Building on December 8. The tour was open to the public and showcased the $9.5 million state-of-the-art facility, which will house the Nome Police Department and the Nome Volunteer Ambulance Department. Technology is in place for coordinating emergency services and advanced evidence collection. A ribbon-cutting ceremony has been postponed to accommodate Governor Sean Parnell, who will be able to participate during a scheduled trip to Nome in February.

Northwestern Alaska Career and Technical Center Update

The Northwestern Alaska Career and Technical Center held a ribboncutting ceremony on December 13 to unveil their new Caterpillar Simulator Center. The eight CAT heavy equipment simulators are located in the NACTEC house in Nome and provide heavy equipment exposure for students enrolled in NACTEC classes. The virtual simulators are an exact replica of the heavy equipment with identical controls. Students face a 42" computer monitor where they see various construction or road scenes. They manipulate the controls to move dirt, grade roads, or conduct other heavy-equipment tasks. The bulldozer has screens in the front and the rear for students to use both ends of the machinery. While students do not receive credit or a certificate for their time on the simulators, they are able to experience how the machines work and gain confidence on the machinery. NACTEC also currently has the use of a welding simulator. Students hold a welding wand and through the use of a welding helmet with computer-generated images, do "virtual welding." Their skills are recorded on a computer, and they can see where they excel and where they need improvement. I wish the students the best in their achievement of their career goals.

Rural Alaska Invited to Apply for Domestic Violence Prevention Grants

The State of Alaska is seeking creative and holistic ideas from rural areas on how to build violence-free communities. Three to four grants will be overseen by the Department of Health and Social Services' Division of Behavioral Health as part of Governor Parnell's statewide initiative to end Alaska's epidemic of domestic violence and sexual assault within a decade.

Recent research has linked traumatic childhood experiences to later health issues such as obesity, tobacco use and injected drug use. "Too often Alaskans who have experienced trauma cope through substance abuse and other damaging reactions, so we're pleased to bring our resources to bear on the problem of interpersonal violence and further support providers who are already doing such important work," said Behavioral Health Director Melissa Stone. We intend this grant to link stakeholders more closely, expanding the volume and breadth of prevention

A primary grant will go to a regional or community coalition that can serve several surrounding smaller towns and villages. This grant will be for $500,000 in the first year and up to $1 million in the next three years, contingent on continued funding appropriations.

"The complementary strengths of many partners can help communities build robust ways to combat domestic violence and sexual assault," said Katie TePas, the governor's domestic violence and sexual assault initiative coordinator.

Two to three additional grants of around $200,000 will go to additional communities.

Successful applicants will need to bring forward new ideas, demonstrate community involvement in assessing regional issues and identify results they intend to accomplish.

Public notice of the request for proposal (RFP) is at http://tinyurl.com/24jl744. The state is willing to help applicants through the process; information on two preapplication teleconferences is in the BED

Alaska Veterans' Advisory Council

Governor Sean Parnell announced appointments to the Alaska Veterans' Advisory Council. Governor Parnell appointed Ryan Tilbury, and reappointed Mayfield Evans, Joseph Fields, Ron Huffman, and John Guinn to the council. The council advises the Department of Military and Veterans Affairs on matters concerning state veterans, their dependents and their survivors.

Huffman, of Nome, is a retired U.S. Air Force chief master sergeant with 32 years of service. He is a program director in the Community Education Department of Kawerak Inc. Huffman earned a bachelor's degree in occupational education from Wayland Baptist University and is a former ROTC instructor at Edgecombe County Schools. He is reappointed to a public seat. I'd like to congratulate Ron Huffman on his reappointment and commend him on his public service.
